During the time of the great sailing ships, sailors spent long idle hours at the time-consuming craft producing intricate bunt bags to hold personal effects.

"In the course of this, variations of knots were developed," Mr. Soutter says.

Apart from these nautical applications the only consistent use of macrame through the years has been in the production of lanyards for military uniforms.

"It gradually became a decorative cross," Mr. Soutter says.

During the Victorian era - macrame fringed shawls, parasols, crevats and even the end of a clergyman's cincture. Clerical robes might have had a macrame fringe as might altar clothes.

Today, macrame might fashion a wall-hanging or handbag, table cloth, lampshade, or even three-dimensional figures and hangings.

The Soutters have produced all of these things, often working together.

When reading an illustrated storybook to his daughters, - Mr. Soutter saw a medieval figure with a small bag hanging round the waist. Interested, he designed and experimented until he produced a small bag ideal for carrying to parties.

While a large woman's handbag can take 28 hours to produce, Mrs. Soutter says its all time pleasantly spent.

"It's the most relaxing hobby I've ever had," she says.

Peasant pouches are one of the more popular macrame items Mr. and Mrs. Soutter produce. Fashioned after a medieval pouch worn round the waist, the pouches are ideal for evening parties, Mrs. Soutter says.

Rev. Maurice Soutter with a macrame three-dimensional hanging. Designed by Mr. Soutter, the large hanging depicts his bright children's play balls.

Macrame the ancient craft of knotting -- is a family hobby with the Soutters who became interested in the craft while living in the West Indies.

NOW THAT IT IS JANUARY

"It is the nature of duties to become pleasures." — Alan Brien.

"During the cold winter months," answered the school boy when asked why days were shorter in winter than in summer, "they get cold and contract. In the summer time they get hot and expand."

Such delightful simplification might quite well explain the months as well — such as January, now that it is upon us.

But for many of its cold, bitter, dreary weather, we found a bit of truth in a friend's observation the other day, who said:

"I, for one, am glad of the leisurely lull that is January. A time for reflection: memories invoked by simple dullies that arise from the aftermath of the holiday season, to dissolve into pleasure that delight and charm."

Her meaning deepens, as later, we dutifully put on the big pantry shelf, until next Christmas a large flowered china bowl which I always filled with oranges, bananas and walnuts during the holiday season, just as mother filled it when we were children at home.

Some traditions, however, are short-lived. Says a Belleville mother, "I feel the hardest thing I have to face at Christmas now, is the fact that my daughters have out-grown dolls which I so loved to buy and give them."

Here is the remains of Christmas cake. How do you put it away to keep it?

"Wrap it in a cheese cloth first soaked in brandy," a family relative advises with an assurance it will keep moist and taste hot an unpleasant duty, don't you agree?

Turing to the array of Christmas cards, the eye gazes upon them lingeringly before gathering them up, as a feeling of appreciation swells within on recognition of each sender's special moment in time to remembering the receiver. Now the cards lie in a heap -- a precious collection of friendship.

Some create their own cards. Mrs. Lewis (Muriel) Andrews, Victoria Street, visited Greece earlier in the year and took her sketch book, drawing pen-and-ink sketches wherever she went. When at the Acropolis in Athens, she wrote, ("It expressed how I felt about it at the time," she explains.) the following:

"Greece is -- rock, sea, sunglare, white wall, a column, vine leaves and olive trees" on a sketch she had just done, and later had photographed in Belleville and turned cones into striking, original Christmas cards: thus sharing her experience with friends. A charming idea!

The excitement of unwrapping gifts given way now to sorting and putting away. But here is a book entitled, "THE GREAT PRICE MAKER" — a treasured relics from the Archives of History -- 1908 SEARS, ROEBUCK CATALOGUE, No. 117. Edited by Joseph J Schroeder, Jr. ; Published by Digest Books, Inc. - - which shall find its place on the book shelf.

"An archeologist or anthropologist can learn as much about a people from studying what they use in their daily life as he can from almost any other source." the introduction reads, to continue:

"In Sears, Roebuck and Co's tremendous 1908 catalog we have a practically illustrated guide to the American of the early 1900s, when he just completed the taming of the country's wilderness and the United States was finally becoming recognized as world power.... People with a desire to step briefly back into the past - - will find material for hour upon hour of fascinating enjoyment..."

"Did you know that Richard Sears, as a young Minnesota railway agent took a shipment of watches on consignment which a local dealer had refused? The venture proved so profitable, he moved in 1887 to Chicago and founded his catalogue business with a young watch repairman named Alvah Curtis Roebuck.

Idly turning the pages for visual glimpses of imported Geneva watches for $15; rings with "fancy mountings, set with three genuine rose diamonds, 44 each. High Grade Bedroom suite -- $24.85. Nottingham lace curtains, 76c a pair. As an enticement, the last pages list items such as asbestos stove mats, tin gravey strainer, butter knife -- silverplated, wood butter moulds - - for 3c, 4c, 6c, 8c...!

Thus does the god Janus' January bridge the old and new year, as the daily round of duty takes over in the form of comfortable, pleasant routine...the tie that binds.

People and Events

Holy Rosary Catholic Women's League met Monday for a film, The Position of Women. The film, introduced by Archbishop Sheen's examined the spiritual and practical role of women in the world. Archbishop stated such women have always been the prophets of hope and that liberation is a freedom of spirit rather than a freedom from responsibility.

Catherine Chapman showed slides of preparations for the bazaar she recently conversed. The members decided to donate proceeds from the bazaar for church altar cover and for the creation of a "living library".

Dorothy Pope, president of the CWL, outlined plans for a visit to Glanmore House in March and asked members to protest against abortion laws.

Jesuits to Promote Birth Control

MANILA (AP) — A Jesuit group in the Philippines has accepted an $81,992 grant from the United States to promote birth control in Asia. The move comes at a time when Roman Catholic bishops here have been circulating a pastoral letter assailing the campaign with Pope Paul's reaffirmation in 1968 of the church's ban on the use of contraceptives.

Rev. James B. Reuter, secretary of the Jesuits Engaged in Social Communications in East Asia, or Jesacomes, said, however, the two groups are not necessarily in conflict.

"We are trying to promote family planning or a voluntary basis in an effort to head off the possibility of involuntary sterilization which is objectionable to us," said Father Reuter.

He will direct the program, financed by the grant from Family Planning International Assistance, the international division of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Jesacomes, which will conduct the project throughout East Asia, said its "unifying goal will be to influence clerical and lay leaders in each country and to move family planning from its present position as an activity on the periphery of the church into the mainstream of Catholic action."

In the pastoral letter, the Bishops Conference of the Philippines said that while the church did not want "unlimited procreation of children ... we are worried about the current massive campaign to talk couples into accepting a number of mechanical and medical contraceptives which are but external means of control."

"We deplore the fact that all these methods depend on something outside man or on some external artificial 'control.'"

Although the Philippines population is at least 80 per cent Roman Catholic, the government, backed by the U.S. Agency for International Development, the World Bank and private agencies such as the Ford Foundation, has maintained one of the largest birth control programs in the world.

The population, estimated now at 43 million, is growing at about 3.3 per cent annually, a rate unmatched anywhere in Asia except in Pakistan.

The bishops also showed worry about possible forced sterilization. Their letter said: "There has been adopted as the principal solution to the population problem massive conception control through the artificial contraceptive approach.

"This approach has followed a common pattern of compulsiveness by official quarters in countries where it has been exposed. The patterns show an escalation from the less radical to the more radical measures of sterilization and abortion."

The letter added:

"Only recently, the department of finance has removed all legal impediment to contraceptive sterilization by officially granting it legal clearance. The contraceptive mentality — a necessary prelude to a movement from the voluntary towards the compulsive."

The letter blamed affluent societies for scarcities which have inspired birth control programs.

"When a people constituting six per cent of the world's population consumes 40 per cent of its goods, the scarcity suffered by the 94 per cent is not due to their large number.

"Often the structure of the community encourages affluence of a few at the expense of the many, destitute families are victims rather than culprits. And what is true of families is also true of larger communities, of regions and of nations."

The program will use films, television, radio and pamphlets in trying to affect attitudes among church leaders in the Philippines, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Korea, Taiwan, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Vietnam.

Macrame How-to

Unlike many artistic crafts, you can take up macrame with a minimum of equipment and expense.

All it requires, to begin, is a knowledge of a few knots, some string and a place to tack it.

String or twine is the basic material of macrame and it doesn't matter much what kind you use.

Rev. Maurice Soutter says that everything from butchers cord to rug yarn to ordinary parcel twine can be employed depending on what you want to make.

"Anything that knots and will hold the knot can be used."

Very little other equipment is necessary. Some persons use a styrofoam or wooden surface to hold the work as it progresses. Others tie a string between chair posts and work from that base.

Fingers are the main tools of macrame with occasional use of a bodkin to weave in end bits.

Many modern macrame decorative pieces include beads which Mr. Soutter says are easy to come by if you check rummage sales.

As for the actual knotting, Mr. Soutter says it's easy.

Cross-Country Skiing Cheaper, Easier

TORONTO (CP) — One of the reasons cross-country skiing is booming is that it is relatively inexpensive and a lot less fuss and bother than the downhill variety.

Virginia Garrett says if you are a novice it would be a good idea to get lessons because you should know how to do things like turning and handling downhill stretches.

"If you are going to start the sport, you might as well start it right," she said.

"Waxing is very important, as it is for Alpine skiing. You execute some of the movements you do in Alpine, for turns or downhill."

You don't need to worry about toning up exercises if you approach it sensibly.

"You will feel some strain in your legs if you don't normally exercise or walk. It can be strenuous, but the beauty of the sport is that you can take it at your own pace," Miss Garrett said.

"When people first start they are wise to go out for just a little while. But if you're tired, you can stop and rest.

"Some people go out all day and take picnics with do our five-mile trail in a little over an hour.

ski clothes are knickers and "You start out just walking, then you build up a pace like running. In a way it's like skating; you're taking long strides.

"Once you've been out a couple of times you get the knack. Our instructors seem to get people started in half an hour."

There are two basic varieties of cross-country skis and ski boots, touring and racing.

The racing equipment is primarily for advanced competitive ...

Traditional cross-country ski clothes are knickers and light jacket. Miss Garrett says the knickers are practical in bush or woods because they are less likely to catch on something than long pants, but they are not necessary.

You wear very light clothing, a couple of sweaters and a windbreaker. If you don't want to make the investment in special clothes, you can wear whatever you have."

If you are interested in lessons or in finding fellow-enthusiasts, cross-country ski clubs and cross-country programs in established ski clubs are beginning to appear.

The Southern Ontario Ski Association expects there will be about 100,000 cross-country skiers in that province alone by 1976, more than double the estimated number involved in the sport now. They base their estimates on the growth of clubs.

Miss Garrett says: "Downhill has become terribly complicated. The equipment is expensive, you usually have to travel, it's getting very crowded.

"People seem to enjoy being part of a group. The whole family can do cross-country skiing. And you can ski almost anywhere, you don't need hills."

But Few In Management

More Women Bankers Than Men

OTTAWA (CP) — Women bankers outnumber men more than two-to-one in this country but those advancing to the manager's chair have been few.

Lately, however, their number has been growing — to 80 in 1973 from only 29 five years ago — and three of them are in Ottawa.

They are Shirley Graham, at the Imperial Bank of Commerce in suburban Kanata, Jean Elliot at the Bank of Montreal branch at Bank and Cecil streets and Gladys Marcellus at the Bank of Nova Scotia's Bronson and Holmwood branch.

Although 80 of 8,500 branch managers in Canadian banks is still a small proportion, bank policies towards recruitment and advancement of women in management positions is changing.

In 1920 there was only one woman in the banking system. By 1961, 56 per cent of bank staffs were women. This year women make up 70 per cent.

The small number of woman bank managers is not totally a reflection of bank policy, it is said. Blair Austen, Eastern Ontario training officer for the Bank of Nova Scotia said 98 per cent of women in banks do not aspire to managerial levels. The two per cent that do are advancing.

Miss Elliot and Miss Marcellus agree that women often do not want to take on the responsibilities of bank management.

Miss Marcellus said: "They are quite happy being ledgerkeepers. I had a girl offered a managerial job once and she turned it down because of the responsibility."

"A lot of blame for not advancing lies on the shoulders of women themselves," Miss Graham said. "The girls whine about their positions but do nothing about it."

Mrs. Brady, district manager for the Bank of Montreal, said women are not willing to move to another city to gain advancement.

"Women get attached to one location and become comfortable with it, they are doing. They become locked in position and then wonder why they aren't advancing."

Miss Graham agreed that mobility is important. "In a branch this size it is very difficult for a girl to get ahead," she said. She has four at her branch.

The Bank of Nova Scotia stresses advancement of women already in the bank rather than direct recruitment of outside women into managerial training and in a clerical position in 1941, he came the first woman accountant at the Canadian banking in 1958 and a branch manager in 1961.

Miss Graham began as a proof teller in 1955 and became a branch manager in 1971.

Miss Elliot has worked for the bank since 1945 and travelled all over Canada in her 28 years in the business.

The three say they feel no discrimination against them because of their sex.

"Gradually men are accepting that we are here to stay," Miss Elliot said. "I think it is only the insecure men who think that women are a threat to their position. The successful men are welcoming us to the top."

Human Rights 'Only Promises'

TORONTO (CP) — The federal governments has not exactly stampeded into the establishment of a human rights commission, Dr. Katherine Cooke, chairman of the federal advisory council on the status of women said Wednesday.

She told a news conference after two days of closed council sessions that laws have been mere promises regarding the contribution and legislation to prohibit discrimination for about three years.

Dr. Cooke said federal Health Minister John Munro had given the council what amounted to a "statement of good intentions" on establishing a human rights commission.

She said the minister told the council the government would give priority to the establishment of a commission at the next session of Parliament which opens Feb. 16.

He also told the council, she said, that proposed legislation would incorporate principles to amend the Canada Labor Code to prohibit sex, marital status and age as grounds for discrimination.

The council asked for precise and enforceable powers for the commission.

On the Pill

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Between 10 million and 15 million women were on birth control pills in China during 1972, estimated Cores, the magazine of the Food and Agriculture Organization. That is 10 to 15 per cent of the approximately 100 million married women of reproductive age in China.

'Average' Guy Really Homely, Wants to Date Beauties, Too

Dear Ann Landers: Please do me (and perhaps thousands of others) a favor. I want to say something to that 37-year-old man who owns his own garbage company and never had a real date in his life.

Dear Mr. Lonesome: I understand your problem better than you think. You say you are average looking. I know several guys who describe themselves that way. Let me tell you, friend, they are not "average" looking; they are downright homely. I am not being critical. Homely guys can be good company. Some are brilliant. I just want you to face the facts.

When is the last time you asked a plain - looking or homely dame out? In this age of girlie magazines, too many men set their standards by what they see in dillies are pumped so full of silicone they can barely sit up. They are also money-runners, empty-headed and lousy company. I know several homely girls who are interesting and smart, and they have real integrity, qualities that count for the long haul. But you are so busy gawking at the platinum blonde in the miniskirt that you look right past the gal who has class.

Have the courage not to care what your friends say when you step out with a plain-looking lady. Live by a new motto: "Take a dog to dinner. She could turn out to be your dream girl — at least as Was One Myself" honestly, I am not being critical. have been written by a member of either sex. Plenty of females are so preoccupied with good looks that they are blind to the wonderful guy who would make a marvelous husband. Thank you for writing.

Dear Ann Landers: Your response to "100 Per Cent Asshole," the fellow who wanted to get married but resented the government's claiming 50 per cent of his intended leave a blood test, was way out in left field. You said: "The state is trying to prevent the tragedy of blind, retarded and deaf babies, which is what can happen if a parent has a venereal disease."

You are wrong. The blood tests required for those who want to marry has nothing to do with VD. They are done to learn whether or not the Rh factor is present. If this condition is determined in advance, the baby can be transfused at birth and lead a normal and healthy life. Please get the facts straight before you look into the advice, Ann. People depend on you.—R.N. in Baltimore

Dear R.N.: My facts are straight; yours are fouled up. The blood test required is to see if couple can be married has nothing whatever to do with the blood factor. It is solely for the purpose of determining whether or not either person has VD. Your apologies are accepted.

Dear Ann Landers: Here's a solution for professional people who are pestered at social affairs for free advice:

After the fourth person at a New Year's Eve party pumped my physician husband for advice on a medical problem, he turned to an attorney friend and asked: "What in the world can I do about this sort of thing?" The attorney said: "Send 'em a bill tomorrow. The word will get around and people will leave you alone." My husband replied, "Thanks, I will."

Two days later my husband received a bill from the attorney. He said it took his advice.—Indoctrinated

Dear Is: Thanks for the word. Nothing succeeds like success.

Don't Count on Rude Relatives

By DORIS CLARK

Dear Doris: Recently, our son got married. Invitations went out to all close relatives with an R.S.V.P. Lists of relatives never replied, so to our dismay, there were if lot of empty places at the tables.

Should we again invite those who didn't reply? I mean when our daughter gets married.

What Is Right

Dear What: Yes, but don't put any money on them. It is just straight bad manners to ignore a wedding invitations.

A few days before the wedding, it is safe to add to the list of expected guests one quarter of those who have not replied, as that proportion is likely to turn up anyway and a few others have accepted will turn out absent.

Dear Doris: I've been elected to membership of a social committee and I haven't the slightest idea what I am supposed to do or what my duties are as a president.

At Sea.

Dear At Sea: The president needs to know her own job and all the others as well. If the secretary cops out it is up to you to see that somebody else keeps the minutes.

If the treasurer can't add, you are the one who must ultimately see that the books are kept right.

You consult with the executive, making decisions about club activities. Don't make the mistake of running the show as if there is only one person in it — you. The more you can involve other members of your club in what's being decided and planned, the better the president you'll make.

I'm sending you my leaflet, titled, "Duties of Club Officers" for the 25 cents that you enclosed. (Available to other readers for 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

(Every day Doris hears from readers who report success after taking her advice on human dilemmas. Let her help you with yours. Write to her in care of this newspaper.)

Men's Atomizer for 'Touch Up' Spray

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — A new wrinkle for men is a pocket-size cologne atomizer for his five o'clock touch up.

Catherine Hunter said it is all part of the trend to "let me be me" that has spread to the world of fragrances.

Miss Hunter is a marketing analyst for International Flavors and Fragrances, Inc.

She said: "Both the fashion and fragrance worlds are into the individual scene. Women or men want to portray traits of themselves, be it elegant, kooky, mod or athletic. There is a fragrance and fashion for every type.

"In the last year, there has been an influx of highly individualized perfumes on the market.

A recent development is a perfume dispenser to aerate rooms as the mood strikes you. You can have your den smelling woody, the bedroom exotic or floral. You might like a plee accent for Christmas and fresh cut grass for spring.

IFF has installed spray machines in the American Museum of Natural History to make their forests smell of trees and ocean scents smell of salt spray.

Miss Hunter said perfume preferences vary by geography. She said Scandinavians like light scents. In the Middle East, rose and jasmine are favorites.

"North American perfumes recently introduced have a much lighter-percentage of perfume oil than their predecessors. North American women like a sowie perfume than people are aware of immediately. European women seem to enjoy perfume at a more subtle, lower strength."

Miss Hunter said she has found that in countries where women cannot afford much perfume, there is a high percentage of fragrance in soaps.

Awkward Sizes

Because Canada Standard Sizing labelling is not compulsory the size of children's clothing often varies widely from brand to brand. Manufacturers have the choice of using standard sizes. In the interests of economy, efficiency and convenience, Consumers' Association of Canada strongly advocates the use of Canada Standard Sizing labeling for all children's garments. CAC asks consumers to request standard sizes when they shop. Only consumer demand will bring change. CAC National Headquarters is located at 100 Gloucester Street,

Seals and Crofts Started Out As Performers in High School

TORONTO (CP) — Jim Seals has had a thing about shabby caps since a little boy gave him one eight years ago. Jim wore it until it fell to bits. He has another one now and a supply for the rest of his life. His music too, like his ever-becapped appearance, is unmistakable.

Jim is one half of Seals and Crofts, one of North America's fastest-rising rock music duos whose remarkable versatility as singers, songwriters and instrumentalists has earmarked them as major contributors to rock music in years to come.

But already their successes have been phenomenal. Since 1968, when Jim and his high-school buddy Dash Crofts began performing under their own names after more than a decade of playing rock 'n' roll with other bands, the duo has been awarded two gold albums for million-dollar sales and two platinum albums for million-record sales. Their fifth album, Diamond Girl, also looks headed for an award.

One unusual aspect of their songwriting is their adherence to the Baha'i faith, the principles of which are spiritual unity and preparation for a wondrous after-life.

"Our faith in the spirit of Baha'u'llah gives us a goal in life—the unification of the world," Dash, a soft-spoken, 33-year-old Texan, said. "It also helps us personally, especially when we're under the pressures of touring and performing. We just keep our eyes on the eye of the hurricane and we get through the turmoil."

Seals and Crofts recently gave a much-awaited concert in here, taking to the stage only minutes after the new year had rolled around. Before more than 10,000 celebrating fans, they delivered a memorable performance, highlighted by their two big hits of 1973, Summer Breeze and Diamond Girl. Both were chart-toppers in Canada during the year.

Moreover, they demonstrated their versatile abilities as instrumentalists: Crofts playing electric mandolin and piano and Seals strumming guitar, blowing jazzy tenor saxophone and playing virtuoso country fiddle.

Both Seals and Crofts have deep roots in music. Seals, 31, also a Texan, was playing fiddle and guitar at the age of five and by the time he was nine had won the Texas state fiddle championship. Soon afterwards he began to play with local country music bands.

Crofts started out on piano when he was four and, encouraged by his father, studied the classics for several years. As a teen-ager influenced by rhythm 'n' blues, he picked up the drums although it was not until the mid-1960s that he began to play the mandolin, his main instrument.

During their school years together, the two formed several bands and were quick to realize that music was to be their career. As teen-agers, they headed west to California and quickly found fame and fortune when they joined a group called The Champs. In 1958 a single, Tequila, was cut and it sold more than six million copies. Tequila remains today one of the big, great-selling singles in rock's history.

The two youngsters, one 15, the other 17, were suddenly pushed into the limelight. The next seven years were spent riding the crest of the wave until The Champs finally faded in the mid-1960s. At the same time, Jim and Dash were introduced to the Baha'i faith and quickly realized there was more to life than reckless extravagance.

"We had spent all those years on the road, making phenomenal amounts of money, most of which we never saw and the rest of which we foolishly spent," Jim recalled.... But another band, the Dawnbreakers, later to become the Baha'is, was put together, enjoyed moderate success until 1968 when Jim and Dash, with clear impressions of the music they wanted to write and the sound they wanted to produce, started out under their own names, backed by a small handpicked band of musicians.

Since the change, the two feel they have come up with their finest work to date, cutting a niche for themselves in the highly-competitive world of rock music.

The key to their success has been their long personal and musical relationship.

"We've reached a stage now," Dash said, "when we couldn't work apart. Musically, we know each other's minds and on stage and in the recording studio that makes for great teamwork."

As veterans of making their careers in rock music, Jim and Dash know what to do with their money. Aside from preparing to launch their own record label and build a studio to record their own and other artists' records, the two are also wealthy landowners. Money has been invested in livestock and grain, partly in the belief that one day, according to the Baha'i teachings, there is to be a great famine.

Eventually they hope to move their families from their present base in Los Angeles and build up a farm on their land, making music and preparing for the second world.

Jack Benny To Repeat Farewell

NEW YORK (AP) — Benjamin Kubelsky, a native of Waukegan, Ill., was in town the other day to catch a few shows and publicize an NBC-TV special he'll star in on Jan. 24.

The show's title is Jack Benny's Second Farewell Special. Mr. Kubelsky, who uses the alias of Jack Benny, emphatically denied that he really plans to retire from show biz after 62 years.

"Naw," he said, lighting a cigar and propping a foot on the coffee table in his hotel suite. "This has nothing to do with retirement. There's only one gag about it in the show."

He said the title exists only because he found that audiences in Las Vegas and elsewhere recalled his First Farewell Special on television last year and laughed when he urged them to watch his second adieu.

"And I tell you," Benny said, "it's tough enough for an audience to remember one last show.

"But when they can remember a title—well, I told my manager if we don't use the title again we're crazy.

"Now I tell the audience we're going to do the third, the fourth, the 90th farewell. But it all depends how this works out."

Benny was asked if he wouldn't give show biz "retirements" a bad name if he persisted in "farewell" specials.

"No, it's been done before, of course," he said, citing the cases of Harry Lauder and Sarah Bernhardt, who made so many farewell tours their boyboyes could stretch from here to China.

"The first one who did it was Madame Schumann-Heink, the opera singer," he said. "She was always making farewell appearances."

Obvious question, but why do performers do that sort of thing?

"Well, they didn't do too many," Benny insisted. "But the minute you do a couple, you see, right away it becomes funny to the public."

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1974

No Restricted Licences From Clendenning Court

Provincial court judge J. L. Clendenning announced in provincial court yesterday that he will no longer consider applications for a restricted driver's licence after someone appearing before him has been convicted of impaired driving.

The judge told the court of his decision after a Belleville lawyer, William Argue, asked the judge to reconsider an earlier ruling in which he did not grant one of his clients a restricted licence to enable her to drive to and from her place of employment.

In making the announcement, the judge said that he understood that insurance companies have decided to cancel the insurance policies of persons convicted of impaired driving, who drive their cars after being granted a restricted licence by a provincial court judge.

The confusion arising from the action of the insurance companies and a recent Supreme Court of Canada ruling a person's driver's licence following a conviction for impaired driving let to his decision, the judge said.

that he will abide by his decision until either the federal or the provincial governments pass legislation to clarify the situation.

Judge Clendenning also said that upheld both a judge's right to grant a restricted licence and the provincial government's right to suspend

Good Turnout for Blood Clinic

Belleville - area residents responded to urgent promptings for more blood donations Thursday.

The result was the biggest donor clinic in the city since World War II, says Bessie Marsh, president of the city's Red Cross organization.

A total of 446 donors gave blood at the first clinic of the year, compared to 377 at the same time last year. Some 40 volunteers were also rejected as donors for various medical reasons.

A major boost was given by students from Moira Secondary School. Some 70 volunteered in the morning as donors and the Red Cross quickly dispatched a bus to bring them to the clinic quarters donated by the Canadian Legion.

Nonetheless the total was such that the donors "should feel proud of themselves."

Public response began building when a newspaper report last weekend revealed the city had a poor reputation as a donor source to the province's hospital blood transfusion centre. Last year, four clinics drew a total 1,496 donors, while Belleville General Hospital dispensed 1,211 units of blood supplied by the Red Cross service.

A number of donors came from surrounding communities, undeterred by the crowd or a change in donor procedures that often lengthened waits more than two hours for some, said Mrs. Walsh.

Until this year a donor rested 19 minutes after giving blood. That time has now been doubled.

Saturday Page Opinion Forum

Beginning tomorrow, Saturday editions of The Intelligencer will contain a new feature — a full page of local opinion and comment.

"Page Five", appearing opposite the regular editorial page, will offer persons in the community a forum for their opinions on a variety of topics.

Tomorrow's first installment will include a debate on the right of teachers to strike and a flashback to days when gasoline rationing was more than a possibility.

Education Week Set to Go

Education week 1974 will be held the week of April 21, with special activities planned for all the schools in Hastings county. Heading up the committee to plan events are Art Brooks, publicity chairman, Walter Cochrane, publications, Lynn Knudsen, secretary and Walter Ranlowski, chairman of the committee for this year.

Education Week in April

Lillian O'Connor, chairman of Hastings-Prince Edward separate school board, will be separate school board, will be the keynote speaker at the kickoff breakfast that begins Education Week April 22.

Mrs. O'Connor will speak at the breakfast at SunValley Motor Hotel in Belleville. The speaker for the breakfast in Bancroft for the North Hastings area will be chosen later.

Highlight of the breakfast each year is the announcement of the winner of the Sir Mackenzie Bowell award presented annually to the person who has made an outstanding contribution to education in the previous year. The 1973 winner was city police safety officer, Robert Hall.

Theme this year is: communicate to learn to communicate.

Communication was the topic at Thursday's education week committee meeting at Loyalist College. Represented were all educational organizations in the county, including Albert College, Ontario School for the Deaf, Ontario Business College and Loyalist.

A newsletter will be sent home from each school to the parents of all children, listing the special education week activities in individual schools. In addition, a four-page education week flyer will be distributed throughout the county, listing activities and outlining items of general educational interest.

Heavy reliance will be placed on audio-visual communication in preparation for 1975, when Hastings county becomes host for official provincial education week opening ceremonies.

Schools with students' television clubs will be asked to have their students prepare tapes for exchange among schools and Bellevue channel 9 will broadcast five one-hour programs on education on the evenings of education week.

The committee will pre-record five one-hour tapes of discussion between local public figures and selected students from grade 7 and 8.

Publications chairman Art Brooks said the five discussion programs will centre on young adolescents at the senior public school level because Radio Station CJBQ will continue to broadcast secondary school hearpit sessions on FM during education week.

In prosjous years the radio station had jointly sponsored with the education week committee two hearpit sessions, one in he north and one in the south of the county. When the committee dropped the idea this year, CJBQ took up as its own project.

Ernst Krivel of Loyalist College put forth an education week suggestion from the college — an exchange of teachers between the college and schools.

"Our teachers are anxious to get into your schools," he said, "and we would like to invite you to lecture to our students."

The exchange invitation will go out to all principals with the education week committee's recommendations.

Brothers Are Guilty As Charged

Two Belleville men pleaded guilty to a total of seven charges of break enter and theft and attempted break and enter yesterday in provincial court.

Clinton Kaye Ferguson, 21, and his brother, Daniel John Ferguson, 22, were arraigned on the charges when they appeared before Judge J.L. Clendenning. The two men were arrested early Saturday morning when police officers found them inside the Brewers Retail store on Station Street.

Court was told yesterday that the Ferguson brothers were arrested and charged with break and enter when police found them hiding in the beer store at 4:28 a.m.

A police constable, who was on a regular patrol of the Station Street area shortly after, found that a window has been removed from its frame on the west side of the Brewers Retail building. After calling back to the police station for assistance the off ifers entered the building and found the brothers hiding in a back office.

After they were arrested, the Fergusons admitted to seven earlier breaks in.

Daniel Ferguson confessed to having broken into the offices of Acme Plumbing and Heating, on Henry Street where he stole property on Jan. 10. He stole $12 in cash and a radio during that incident.

The two brother also admitted to breaking into the Bata Shoe store and the Trudeau Motors on Station Street the same night they were arrested.

Judge Clendenning registered convictions on all charges aga nst the two men and remanded them in custody for sentence on Jan. 21, pending the preparation of a pre-sentence report.

Cleo Colling Parking Chief

City pharmacist, Cleo Colling, has been appointed chairman of the Belleville parking authority. A member of the authority for many years, he succeeds Douglas Dunnnie, Mr. Colling, in his inaugural address, favored better lighting on the commercial parking lot along the Moira river bank, purchase of property at the north of the entrance to the commercial lot and purchase of the Belleville Public Utilities Commission building for a multi-level parking garage with entrances from both Front and Pinnacle Streets.

Gas Bar Held Up

MARYSVILLE — Officers of the Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police are investigating a gas bar holdup that netted two men $400 in Marysville last night.

Two men, wearing dark blue snowmobile suits and balaclavas, entered the corporate gas bar at the intersection of Highways 49 and 401 around 10 p.m. and ordered the attendant to give them the service station's receipts for the day.

Waiting for a Roof

In yesterday's subzero temperatures, a bulldozer sits idle before the rust-colored I-beams that will soon support the roof of Robert's Home Centre Ltd., Quinte area's newest and biggest building supply retailer. Scheduled for completion in late spring 1974, the project has been held up by the unavailability of steel. The self-serve 10,000 square foot showroom on a 4.5 acre site, on Highway 2, three miles west of Belleville, is expected to cost more than $180,000.

Building Supply Centre Waiting for Materials

Tall I-beams stand bare and unattended three miles west of Belleville as yet only a promise of a $180,000 building supply retail outlet, scheduled for completion sometime this spring.

When the Robert's Home Centre Ltd. showroom-warehouse is completed on the Trenton road, west of Wallbridge-Loyalist Rd., it will join five other Belleville lumber yards. But it'll be one with a difference, says Robert Pope, former co-owner of Bellewood Lumber and now Bele owner of the centre.

For the last number of years, Mr. Pope has travelled visiting different lumber yards in various cities, and has come up with a new approach for selling lumber and hardware supplies in Belleville.

"The trend today is toward people coming in, serving themselves, and getting out," says Mr. Pope. Most lumber yards in Belleville are arranged so that a customer goes to a counter, gets advice from a salesperson, pays and then goes out to the warehouse to finally see what he has just bought.

And here's the difference, says Mr. Pope. The new store will have its lumber displayed under one roof. All goods will be priced. Each customer will get a four-wheeled cart. Each will actually see what he is purchasing. Each will get to choose what he wants, without having to talk to a salesperson. Each will load his own cart, take it to a checkout counter, pay and leave.

That, essentially, is the system This way, Mr. Pope feels, he will be able to keep his staff to a minimum of 10, thus cutting his overhead and subsequently the price to the customer.

Construction on the main 10,000 square-foot building has been slow. The shortage of steel has delayed work. The I-beams and joists came earlier this week, but the cold-rolled steel, to be used for walls, is expected later this month. The contractor, Cornerstone Construction Ltd. has been waiting to start work for two months.

By the summer of 1975, storage warehouses, equipment, inventory and other finishing, such as landscaping, should put the value built into the 4.5 acre site at $500,000, says Mr. Pope.

Asked the reason he built on Highway 2, the 32-year-old, life-long Bellevillian exdrawback lucrative - wise. We'll ie able to accommodate about 60 cars, others can only park 30.

"I think the city is going west. And being just outside the city limits, there are no restrictions as to business hours. Also the business tax should be smaller.

"It's closer to Trenton, and I'm hoping to draw people from there. I'm also hoping to catch the people coming down Wallbridge-Loyalist Rd. to cottages in Prince Edward County."

He concluded, "I felt Belleville was ready for this kind of lumber yard. If I hadn't done it, someone else would have."

Arbitration Award Welcomed

Canadian Brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers local 128 chairman, Carson McLauchlin, hailed the recently announced settlement between the Belleville non-operating railway workers and the railways as "just", but has pointed out the question of "job security" still looms large among workers.

"It remains that we went over a year without a contract and this one expires at the end of 1974," the chairman's release states.

The settlement, outlined in a report by arbitrator, former Supreme Court justice Emmett Hall, outlines a nine per cent award for 1974. This says, Mr. McLauchlan, will help the non-ope keep abreast of the predicted inflation rate of 10 per cent this year.

Council Opposes

Hastings county council has lent its support to a city of Windsor resolution asking the Ministry of National Defence to rescind its announced cut in the Civil Emergency Measures Program.

The resolution asked that greater emphasis be placed on strengthening the civil emergency measures program.

Council took no action on a town of Oakville resolution asking that the election act be amended to permit the issuing of voting proxies up to and including the day of election. Under the present act proxies cannot be issued after 5 p.m. the day previous to the election.

Neither did council concur in a Lambton county resolution asking that construction safety enforcement be returned to the counties.

Council did concur however in a Victoria county resolution asking that the province reinstate payment of woll bounty.

No Shortcuts to Restore Moira Spawning Beds

There is no quick method to rectify the problems that have wasted the Moira River as a spawning ground for fish, says a natural resources ministry official.

A complex combination of man-made circumstances ranging from siltiwe and land clearance to runoff caused by human development in the river's watershed — has resulted in the decline of fish life in the river.

In fact, says a ministry report the Moira "is suffering from some of the most detrimental effects of human interference."

The report — a summation of the situation studied for years by ministry wildlife experts — was sent to the Moira River Conservation Authority and Management. It has been circulated among members of the Belleville Harbor Improvement Committee. Committee chairman Stu Meeks has been indicated he would file it with city council.

The various problems caused by settlement along the river's length throughout the years caused the decline in spawning of fish — particularly the prized yellow pickerel — over the years.

"The heavy use of this watershed and its fisheries and water resources have resulted in the complete collapse of the yellow pickerel population at the mouth (in Belleville)," says the summation.

Among the adverse results of human development: Silting from erosion of farmlands and land-fill operations; industrial municipal and agricultural effluents which have bred suffocating growth of algae and aquatic plants; temperature increases, partly caused by land stripping along the watershed, low water flows and dam construction.

"In general the mouth and parts of the watershed no longer support the large fisheries they once did," says the ministry report.

The decline of pickerel spawning first became distinctly noticeable about 10 years ago, attracting concern from provincial government biologists and fishermen.

The experts have been collecting their data and making observations over the years, although there has been no recent research.

There is no one immediate solution to a problem with so many diverse causes, the factors, a ministry wildlife official states.

The quality of the river is now being improved "in areas." In "the long run it will be improved even more" as more precautions are taken and the results of improved municipal and industrial run-offs take effect, says Hans Van Rosen, ministry district fish and wildlife supervisor at Napanee.

"But there is no short method to rectify anything," he said.

The situation also links in with the Bay of Quinte where fish life has declined over the years as water quality declined.

The provincial and federal governments, along with United States counterparts, have been endeavoring to reestablish fish in Lake Ontario and the Bay.

Such programs, says the ministry summation, "shows the high priority set by the provincial and federal governments to clean up these waters."

Rumor Killed by MPP

There is no truth in the rumor that the Ministry of Natural Resources will close its district office at Tweed.

This was stressed Wednesday by Hastings MPP Clarke T. Rollins, who told county council that contrary to persistent rumor, the ministry had no intention of pulling out of Tweed.

He said no definite knowledge of how the rumor had started but suspected it had been the result of a ministry reorganization that had seen a number of officials transferred from Tweed.

Now, however, the reorganization was being completed and new officials were moving in with the result that the vacant government houses were again being occupied.

Sabres Should Forget Games On Flyers' Ice

By GLENN COLE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Coach Joe Crozier didn't want to say anything Thursday night after his Buffalo Sabres were crushed 7-2 by Philadelphia Flyers in one of three National Hockey League games.

In other games, Montreal Canadiens hammered Minnesota North Stars 6-1 and St. Louis Blues nipped New York Rangers 3-2.

Flyers 7 Sabres 2

Like most winning coaches, Fred Shero was willing to chat about the Flyers' seventh home win over Buffalo in four years. The Sabres now are 0-7-2 lifetime in Philadelphia.

"The secret to beating Buffalo is keeping the puck away from their big guns," Shero said, referring to Gilbert Perreault and Rick Martin.

Shero also noted a major flaw in Buffalo's defence.

"When we can come out of the corner several times, something is wrong," he said.

Bobby Clarke scored twice for the Flyers, including a short-handed goal at 1:40 of the first period to lead Philadelphia to its seventh straight home-ice win.

Orest Kindrachuk, Terry Crisp, Bill Flett, Rick MacLeish and Barry Ashbee got the other goals for the Flyers, who now have a five-point lead over second-place Chicago in the West Division.

Canadiens 6 North Stars 1

Rookie left winger Bob Gainey broke a 2-2 deadlock scoring drought and goalie Michel Larocque kicked out 36 shots as Montreal defeated Minnesota for the fourth time this season.

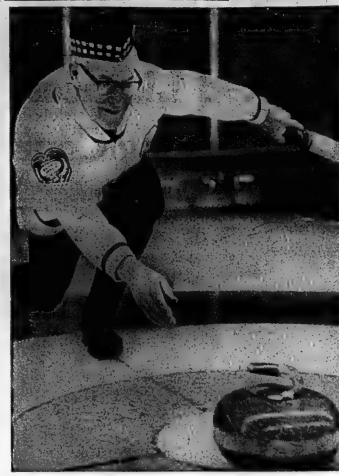
Gainey, who was just placed on a line with centre Yvon Lambert and right winger Murray Wilson, had two goals. Montreal's No. 1 amateur draft selection last year, now has three goals this season.

Guy Lafleur, Guy Lapointe, Chuck Lefley and Yvan Cournoyer were the other Montreal shooters to beat Minnesota goalie Fern Rivard. Bill Goldsworthy got Minnesota's goal.

Blues 3 Rangers 2

Two goals by Garry Unger and another by Chris Evans gave St. Louis its win over New York. The victory helped the Blues snap a four-game losing streak.

Steve Vickers got both goals for the Rangers, who suffered their first loss in four games since general manager Emile Francis resumed coaching duties with the club.



In off-ice news, the NHL announced that defenceman Brian Watson of the Blues has been indefinitely suspended until the league can investigate an incident in Wednesday's Pittsburgh Penguins-Los Angeles Kings match.

Watson, who was dealt to the Blues by the Penguins after the Wednesday clash, was ejected from the game for aggravated manhandling linesman Bob McLaren after Watson and the Kings Dan Maloney fought.

The Penguins, who play in Vancouver tonight against the Canucks, acquired defenceman Ron Stackhouse in their third deal in two weeks. To get Stackhouse from Detroit, Pittsburgh sent goalie Jim Rutherford and defenceman Jack Lynch to the Red Wings.

The Penguins also announced that defenceman Bob McManama has been called up from Hershey Bears of the American Hockey League for tonight's clash, one of two on the schedule.

In the other, Atlanta Flames play host to California Golden Seals.

Still Shows Fine Form

Alf Phillips Sr., is widely known as a curler who made several trips to the Canadian championships and won the seniors championship in 1963. But he'd like to be placed in the Sports Hall of Fame as a diver. Phillips was Canada's best diver for nine straight years up to 1935, when he turned professional. He won two gold medals in one day at the British Empire Games in 1930. However, diving isn't represented in the Sports Hall of Fame. (CP Photo)

Junior Series Proposed

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Murry Williamson, coach of the United States' national junior hockey team, wants the best U.S. club to meet Canada's Memorial Cup winner for the North American junior championship.

He said the proposed competition could be played on a best-of-five or best-of-seven basis in Minneapolis, Colorado Springs, Toronto or Winnipeg.

"I think it's pretty obvious to all of us in hockey that a world junior championship is needed," he said in a telephone interview from Bloomington, Minn.

"It's the only level that affords every country an equal chance. The age limits are the same for all countries and there are no other differences. Junior hockey doesn't have the political hangups that the senior world championships do."

He also said the U.S. should follow Canada's lead and withdraw from future senior world hockey tournaments.

Williams, who coached the U.S. team to fifth place in the recent six-country junior tournament at Leningrad, said a senior world tournament no longer makes sense because "it discriminates against a country using its best hockey players."

"Canada looked bad at the time when it pulled out of the world championships a couple of years ago because the Europeans wouldn't permit the use of professionals on the team.

"I know the move was criticized even in the States. It looked on the surface like you were taking your ball and going home. We realize now, of course, that wasn't the case at all—that Canada was just looking for a fair shake against the rest of the countries involved.

"There's no way now for the U.S. to be in any other tournament today but at the junior level. The senior thing is just a big sham, as far as I'm concerned. It's just a chance for a trip to Europe."

Canada withdrew from world championship play in 1970 when it was not allowed to use a certain number of professionals on its team.

Williamson, who said he has a trophy he would gladly put up for the so-called North American championship, believes the U.S. can compete with Canadian major junior teams—the sexes eligible for the Memorial Cup.

No. 800 for Gordie Howe

By GERY SUTTON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Some oldtimers never fade away.

Gordie Howe, who played 25 years in the National Hockey League and is in his first season with the World Hockey Association, is an excellent example.

So are Ralph Backstrom and playing coach Pat Stapleton, both of Chicago Cougars, although they might be considered youngsters when comparing them with Howe.

Howe, 45-year old right-winger, playing on the same line with his 18-year-old son Mark and 25-year-old Jim Sherritt, scored his 800th regular-season goal Thursday night to help Houston Aeros defeat Vancouver Blazers 7-4.

In the other WHA game, the 27-year-old Backstrom scored twice and Stapleton, 33, got a goal and two assists in leading the Cougars to a 5-2 triumph over New England Whalers.

Howe, who scored 786 goals in league play and 67 in playoffs for the NHL Detroit Red Wings, increased his over-all career total to 867, best in pro hockey.

He signed a reported four-year, million-dollar contract with the Aeros, while Mark and his other son—19-year-old Marty, who plays defence—joined packs for $100,000 apiece for four years.

Howe, still the holder of numerous NHL records, has 1,304 points including 1,157 assists in his career.

His last season as a player was in 1970-71 before he joined the Wings as an executive.

Aeros 7 Blazers 4

Gordie also assisted on two goals by son Mark, his 20th and 21st of the season, as the Aeros won their fifth straight and increased their first-place lead in the West Division to six points over Edmonton Oilers and Winnipeg Jets.

Father Howe now has 57 points this season—14 goals and 43 assists—for fourth place in the scoring race. He wound up with 52 points in his last season with the Wings.

Gordie got his 800th goal at 5:46 of the first period to give the Aeros a 1-0 lead. Don Burgess—his first of two—and Ed Hatoum scored to put the Aeros ahead but Mark Howe's goal at 16:18 tied the count before Bryan Campbell made it 3-2 for Vancouver at 19:29.

The Aeros scored two unanswered goals in the second period and outscored the Blazers 3-1 in the final 20 minutes for their 34th win in 41 games.

Eagles' Test Begins Tonight

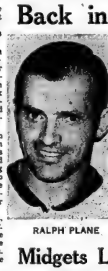
After a lengthy layoff, Senior A hockey returns to Memorial Arena tonight when the third place Orillia Terriers have the distinction of being the first club to test the revamped Belleville Eagles in a 9 o'clock contest.

A lot has happened in the Eagles' nest since the club last took to the ice for league play.

The order of the day has been change.

New franchise holder, a switch in coaches, players returning to the club after voluntary "retirement" ...it all adds up to a question mark And that question mark can be replaced by an exclamation mark should Eagles reappear with an impressive showing.

Terriers, defending Allan Cup champions, have been having their problems this season. They occupy third place in the standings going into tonight's action, two points back of Cambridge Hornets who trail league leading Barrie Flyers by four points.



Barrie has 38 points, Cambridge 34 and Orillia, 32. Brantford Foresters have been gaining ground. They're solid fourth with 22 points. Eagles have 12 and last place Welland Merchants, four.

All six teams are in action tonight. In the other contest, Brantford is at Barrie and Cambridge visits Welland.

If ever there was a weekend to pick a club to bet, this is it for the Eagles. Following tonight's game here, the club takes to the road for a Saturday date in Cambridge and Sunday, Eagles are the visitors on Brantford Ice.

It's quite a baptism of fire for coach Walt Gerow and his skaters. But most of them are familiar with having to come through in clutch situations and they could make it a very productive weekend.

Club general manager Dick Burrowes says the Allan Cup

The Belleville Lion's Midgets lost more than the game last night in Kingston. For the next six weeks the midgets will be without the services of their top scorer Mike Crawford.

During the third period of the 10-5 loss to Kingston, Crawford was sent to Kingston General Hospital where it was discovered he had broken his ankle.

Were Bobcats Thinking Ahead?

ETOBICOKE (Special) — The Belleville Bobcats lost their game in hand on first place Pickering last night, when they were defeated 8-5 by Etobicoke Selects.

Belleville had a chance to move into a tie with Pickering had they beaten Etobicoke, but a "lack lustre effort", as coach Moe Hunter put it, kept the Cats from taking advantage of their extra game.

The locals travelled to Etobicoke for the Metro Junior B contest with only 14 players, three of which were brought up from the minor hockey system.

Four of the Cats regulars, Wally Dalzaard, Brian Cousins, Kevin Joudrey and Dave Fiesch, were out of action for various reasons.

John Sergeant scored the first period Belleville goal.

The Selects put the game way out of reach in the second, outscoring Belleville 4-1 and bringing the count to 6-2 by the end of the middle 20 minutes.

Danny D'Alvie, Marty McNally, Romano Carlucci and Ken Lariener were the marksmen for the Selects in the middle frame.

Stan Lutka and D'Alvie rounded out the scoring for the Selects and the game at 8-5 Etobicoke.

"I guess the boys were thinking more about their game tonight," said Hunter, "and just forgot that they had to play that one before they play this one."

Tonight, Belleville travels to Pickering for a battle with the first place Panthers. Should the Bobcats win tonight, they will be tied for the top spot.

Belleville Yardmen Shade Oshawa Midgets

OTTAWA (Special) — Belleville Yardmen Benefit Fund and Oshawa hooked up in a close, well played Ontario Minor Hockey Association minor midget game here Wednesday with the visitors pulling out a 4-3 win.

Sandy Waterson's goal with less than five minutes to play decided the issue. Defenceman Tom Belch played a big part in arranging the score. Paul Haymen was also in on the winning counter.

It was Waterson's second goal of the game. He opened and closed the scoring for the Yardmen. Rob Chase and Bob Thompson had the other Belleville goals. Thompson's came in the second period on a well executed solo effort.

Sharing goaltending duties for Yardmen were Mark Meehan and John Merrill.

In six games played last night five of the final scores saw the winning teams victorious by eight points or less.

At Quinte, the BCI seniors came out with a slight 49-48 win over the Saints, while the Saints upset the Trojans 67-48. The BCI midgets made up for the junior loss, defeating Quinte 50-43.

At Moira, the Trojans took two out of three from Centre Hastings Secondary of Madoc, winning in junior and midget by respective scores of 40-35 and 43-36. The Moira seniors were beaten 45-41, but couldn't cause the visiting Madoc seniors untoward them.17-10 in the final quarter. At the end of the third quarter in the senior game the score was 35-32 in favor of the Trojans.

Johnny Miller Man, He's Hot

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Johnny Miller, current United States' Open title-holder, made it look easy Thursday with an 10-under-par 62 in the first round of the $150,000 Tucson open golf tournament.

Miller, who swept the first two titles on the pro tour this season, established a four-stroke lead in his bid to become the first man since Arnold Palmer in 1963 to win three consecutive United States tournaments.

"I don't mean to sound cocky or anything like that," Miller said, "but if I use my head, don't start making mental mistakes, I don't think anybody can beat me this week.

"... I don't see any reason I can't finish 15 under. And I think 15 under will win it."

Jerry Heard and Allen Miller had 66s on the 7,305-yard Tucson National Golf Club course, six-under-par in the chase for a $30,000 first prize.

Gary Sanders followed at 67. A group at 68 included Orville Moody, Gibby Gilbert, Kermit Zarley, George Johnson and Bop Pace.

Rookie Ben Crenshaw had a 70 while defending champion Bruce Crampton of Australia and Lee Trevino with identical strokes back with 73s. Palmer, Jack Nicklaus and Tom Weiskopf are not playing.

Ben Kern of London, Ont., had a 77.

Miller needed only 25 putts, missed only two greens and was within 20 feet of the flag on 14 holes. He had 11 birdies, missed an eagle Trevino shot and stopped two inches short of the cup and took a single bogey.

It set a course record, kept alive his record of going under par in every competitive round this year, was the best score on the tour this year and matched the best shot all last season.

"You can't expect anyone to win three in a row," said Miller, who took the Bing Crosby tournament that opened the season and followed with a rallying victory last week in Phoenix.

"But I think I'm going to."

Billy Casper Fined

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The sponsors of the $150,000 Tucson Open have fined golfer Billy Casper $150 for not honoring his commitment to play in this year's tournament.

Casper's manager, Ed Barner, said Thursday he signed Casper Dec. 18 but did not tell him.

Jack Tuthill, players' division tournament director, said the fine is imposed immediately but Casper has the option to protest to the Professional Golfers' Association commissioner.

NEW YORK (AP) — Sport Magazine's 1973 Man of the Year has four feet. He's a Secretariat, the first thoroughbred Triple Crown winner in 25 years.

In announcing the selection Thursday, the magazine described Secretariat as "the epitome of the strong, silent athlete."

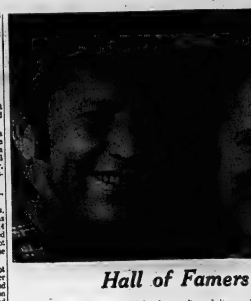
Secretariat, a four-year-old Ranking at stud at Claiborne Farm in Paris, Ky., after being syndicated for a record $6.08 million, beat out such names as Hank Aaron, O.J. Simpson, John Cappelletti, Jackie Stewart and George Foreman.

Also in the magazine's list of candidates were women athletes Billie Jean King, Olga Korbut and Kornelia Ender.



Joe Torre Reported Signed

ST. LOUIS (AP) — First baseman Joe Torre was "basically" asked to take a pay cut, was among five players reported Thursday by St. Louis Cardinals as having signed 1974 contracts with the National Baseball League club.

The 33-year-old Torre, who completed a two-year contract in 1973, said Wednesday he was asked to take a $70,000 cut from his $150,000 annual salary.

Torre, the league's most valuable player in 1971, tapered off to a .297 batting average last year in 141 games, hitting 13 home runs and driving in 60 runs.

Other Cardinals listed as having signed their contracts were catchers Jeff Torborg, Larry Hisle and Marc Hill and rookie outfielder Jerry Mumphrey.

Hall of Famers

Slugger Mickey Mantle, left, and pitcher Whitey Ford, longtime New York Yankee teammates, looked like this in New York, Wednesday, after being elected to baseball's Hall of Fame. Mantle became only the seventh player in history to be elected to the Hall of Fame in his first year of eligibility, drawing a total of 322 votes on the 345 ballots cast by members of the Baseball Writers Association of America. OTTWA (CP) — Gloucester Rangers moved back into second place in the Central Junior Hockey League Thursday with a 3-1 victory over Pembroke Lumber Kings.

Chasing leading Nepean Raiders, the Rangers broke a weeks-long slump with Keith Blair in the process. The loss held Pembroke fourth in the six-team league, three points behind the Bears.

Hugh Bham scored twice and Mike McDuff once in the victory with Dennis Gaudin credited the only Pembroke goal to hold them in a 1-1 tie after the first period. The Rangers scored once in each period.

A close-backing contest developed as both teams appeared conscious of the importance of the points, it also was close statistically as the Rangers outshot the Kings 29-28.

First the Hill (Blazers) Then, Mountain (Celtics)

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atlanta coach Cotton Fitzsimmons figures beating Portland Trail Blazers was like stepping over a little bit of a hill," and with composure, the mountain will be scaled too.

The Hawks never trailed in winning the National Basketball Association game Thursday night. The victory snapped a five-game Atlanta losing streak.

"We'll try to climb a mountain tomorrow when we play Boston," Fitzsimmons said after the victory. "If we repeat tonight's performance, don't panic and are able to control the tempo of the game, we should be able to beat the Celtics."

Elsewhere in the NBA, Capital Bullets beat Cleveland Cavaliers 101-96, and Golden State Warriors topped Phoenix Suns 127-120.

In the American Basketball Association, Memphis Tams defeated Indiana Pacers 115-96, and San Antonio spurs beat San Diego Conquistadors 101-97.

Plans to Rule Out Chance of a Draw

NEW YORK (AP) — Plans for a decisive extra round in case of a draw were announced Thursday for the return bout at Madison Square Garden Jan. 28 champions Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier.

"We are making the request to Ed Dooley, head of the New York State Athletic Commission," said John Condon, representing the Garden. "If the fight is a draw after 12 rounds, we are asking that a 13th round be added to determine a winner—or as many rounds as necessary."

The statement was made at a luncheon for the two title contenders.

Frazier won the first meeting when both went into the ring with broken records.

John Condon, Garden publicist, announced the fight is all a $2,500,000 affair with a $1 million live gate.

Bob Arum, head of Top Rank, Inc., co-sponsor of the bout, said the fight will be shown in every part of the world and will be "seen by one billion people."

The first battle between the two fighters, March 8, 1971, was reported to have grossed $20 million, with each fighter receiving $2.5 million.

Bassett also said one club is interested in Leo Cahill, fired as head coach of Toronto Argonauts of the CFL, after the 1973 season by John Bassett Sr.

The new league plans to open its 20-game season in July with 12 teams operating.

THORN — In loving memory of a dear father and grandfather Charles Bernard Thorn who passed away Jan. 19, 1968.

Remembrance is a golden chain,
Death tries to break but still in death true
To love,
To have, to have and then to part,
Is the greatest sorrow of one's heart.
Five years may wear out many things,
But this they wipe out never,
The memory of those happy days,
That we were together forever.
—Never forgotten by wife, daughter and daughter Janet and son Douglas.

THORN, Charles Bernard — In fond and loving memory of our dear father Charles Bernard who went home Jan. 19th, 1968.

Dear father, you left us quietly,
We return for him, we dearly loved,
Years in silence have flown,
Nor can we could not save.
For memory keeps you ever near us,
Remembrance is the golden chain
Through you died six years ago today.
—Lovingly remembered by daughter Virginia (Jamie) and son-in-law Ernest, grandson Major J.F. and granddaughter Dee.

KILPATRICK — In loving memory of a dear husband and father who passed away on Jan. 19, 1973.

We watched you fade away,
Our loved one could not save you,

We prayed still with wild sadness,
Our eyes shed many a tear,
God took you home, it pleased him you,
As it took our mighty day.
—Sadly missed — wife Ruby and son John.

HAGERMEYER — In loving memory of our dear son and brother Allen, who passed away Jan. 19, 1970.

Rail Officials Seek Parley On Restrictions on Rates

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's railways want immediate meetings with federal officials to see what can be done about current "restrictive government policies in pricing railway transportation," Ian D. Sinclair, chairman and chief executive officer of Canadian Pacific Ltd., said Thursday.

In a statement issued 24-hour after Mr. Justice Emmett Hall announced improved wage benefits for 93,000 railway workers, Mr. Sinclair said "the crisis that the Hall award has brought about in the maintenance of efficient and effective railway transportation in Canada is real."

He said the award, coupled with pay increases expected by Parliament Sept. 1, is the largest labor cost increase ever faced by the railways, and they will need more than $250 million of additional revenue in 1974 to offset it.

In a separate statement issued Thursday, Norman r MacMillan, chairman and president of Canadian National, said Mr. Justice Hall's award is "generous and costly."

It will add $59.2 million to the cost of the two-year labor contract now in force at CN.

He said the total settlement, made up of Parliament's legislated award plus the Hall arbitration, will cost CN more than $235 million over two years.

Each worker will receive 15 cents hourly in retroactive pay for 1973, or about $312 for 40-hour-a-week employees.

This amount is above a 34 cent hourly 1973 wage raise set by Parliament for 56,000 non-operating workers, following their summer-time national rail strike ended by the government, and above 8% per cent raises given to other employees.

The arbitration award, prepared by Emmett Hall, retired Supreme Court of Canada justice, also gives the workers a 1974 pay increase of nine per cent. Parliament had awarded increases of 6.5 per cent effective Jan. 1, and 1.5 per cent on July 1.

Average hourly pay to the non-ops, who include laborers, porters, clerks, firemen and telegraph operators, will rise to $4.28 retroactive to Jan. 1 compared with $3.54 hourly two years ago.

For 22,000 tradesmen, the average hourly pay is to rise to $5.37 compared with $4.66 over the last contract. The new figure includes a 30-cent shift differential for the 24-hour day.

And 14,500 trainmen will have an average hourly pay-rate retroactive to Jan 1 of $5.18, compared with $4.52 in the past.

As well, more than 6,000 railway engineers will receive improved wage benefits.

May Stagger Working Hours

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government, Ottawa's largest employer, has asked its various departments and agencies to work out a system of flexible or staggered working hours to help ease downtown traffic congestion.

The treasury board, in a news release Thursday, said departments will be asked to take measures to expand the normal peak traffic period from 8:15 a.m. to 8:45 a.m. and 4:15 p.m. to 4:45 p.m.—to relieve pressure on public transport systems.

The board wants to see the 30-minute lunch spread over 60 minutes. To do this, departments have been asked to stagger their working hours or, where feasible, use flexible hours to allow employees to choose their own hours of work.

Now, six departments totalling about 2,400 civil servants are experimenting with flexible hours. Employees, after consultation with their supervisors, may start work as early as 7 or after 7 a.m., as long as they put in 7½ hours before 4 p.m.

About 35,000 civil servants work in a roughly 1-square-mile area of the downtown core.

Consultants Hired to Do Jobs While Civil Servants Are Idle

OTTAWA (CP) — While some employees in an ever-expanding federal public service are being put through lack of work, the government is paying out millions of dollars each year in consulting and special fees.

And although much of the $705 million set aside in the 1973-74 estimates pending estimates for outside help pays for services the government cannot, or will not provide, a considerable portion duplicates work that could be done by full-time workers.

The $705 million, up from $614 million in the previous fiscal year, comes out of an estimated expenditure of $18.4 billion for 1973-74.

It pays for special outside legal fees and charges made by engineers, analysts, computer specialists, accountants and other "professional and expert assistance," contracted cleaning services and health care expenses.

Some of the money is just transferred from one department to another when one agency provides services to another.

While this money is paid out in increasing amounts, the public service continues to grow. In September, 1973, there were nearly 282,000 employees in departments and departmental corporations—an increase of five per cent in a year.

Stories of waste and duplication abound, public servants report, and hiring outside help often leads to friction between permanent hands and those contracted.

Often contract workers are paid more than regular public servants who are doing similar work. Yet full-time staff sometimes are besieged for information by consultants who know less about government operations and policies than the regulars, some public servants complain.

An advertising agency was asked to produce one million 28-page calendars at an estimated cost of $229,000. The post office ended up with 800,000 24-page calendars at a total cost of $302,600—including $37,000 in federal sales tax.

But post office employees had to rewrite material submitted by the agency because it was unsatisfactory and the government paid the full amount in advance even though there was no requirement for immediate payment.

This event appears only to be the tip of an iceberg of inefficient use of staff and consultants if random comments with public servants are a guage.

"When it came back it was so horrible we had to rewrite every word."

And a contracted employee who found herself preparing a report for another department wondered why she had been hired.

"There were five or six people in the section I'm working for who were walking about complaining that they had nothing to do. Quite frankly, they all could be saved if governments administrators made better use of staff they have on hand.

Police May Get ID's

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP) — Policemen here may soon be wearing identification tags, if the police commission accepts a proposal by the mayor's committee. The commission has agreed to consider the move which, the committee said, would be useful in direct contact between uniformed officers and the public.

Phoney

NEWMARKET, Ont. (CP) — When Edward Hall married recently, he and his bride received a $50 bill from his mother. Unfortunately, the bill turned out to be counterfeit. His mother said he picked up the bill from a bank when he cashed a cheque.

Advice Is Given On Metric System

TORONTO (CP) — Conversion to the metric system of measurement, already introduced in schools, hospitals and some industries, has prompted advice for anxious adults from university professors.

Prof. Fred Rimrott of the faculty of engineering at the University of Toronto says the easiest way to forget the old system is to plunge into metrics all at once.

By learning what a kilo of sugar looks like, a person will be able to decide how many kilos to buy without having to think that a kilo equals approximately 2.205 pounds, he said.

The new measurements of grams, metres and litres are easier because they are set based on a decimal system where all the units are multiples of 10, professionals say. Another advantage is that the metric system is used worldwide.

In Toronto's elementary schools, pupils in Grades 1 to 3 are learning the metric system exclusively and do not have to convert.

In 1970, the federal government decided to begin eliminating the imperial system and established the federal metric commission to promulgate the metric system, which originated in France in 1790.

Celsius, Kelvinage, head of the metric commission, says the government commission will introduce metric weather reports and temperatures on the Celsius thermometer next year.

Provincial highways department have developed a plan to change all road signs to metric between 1973 and 1975.

Mr. Gossage said General Motors has indicated it will start producing cars with metric specifications by 1977.

The federal government plans no legislation to force adoption of the system, but as more and more are switching the old system is doomed.

Community College Financing Criticized

HAMILTON (CP) — Ontario's new method of financing community colleges is "self-destructive," an educator in the provincial government said Thursday.

Norman Sisco, chairman of the Ontario council of governors for community colleges, told the council that the present financing formula threatens to put at least 12 colleges in the red in the next fiscal year.

The colleges derive about nine per cent of their funds from tuition fees and rest from government financing.

As of April, 1974, Ontario's universities and colleges will receive funds for the coming year based on enrolment in the previous year.

"This is appropriate for many government activities where growth has levelled off but it makes it very difficult for colleges which are at the rate of 15 to 20 per cent a year," Mr. Sisco said.

"If you have to take in more students next year on an income based on last year's enrolment, you're going to be in trouble."

Girl Buried

OTTAWA (CP) — The body of Betsy Lancaster was to be buried here today after being exhumed from an unmarked grave in Montreal.

The body of the 16-year-old girl was discovered near Hull, Que., last August but wasn't identified until November. The Lancaster family wasn't informed of her death until Dec. 7, about two months after they reported her missing.

Her father, Frank Lancaster, then discovered that his daughter had been buried in Montreal on orders from the Quebec justice department.

Last week, Quebec Justice Minister Jerome Choquette ordered the department to pay for the exhumation and burial in a cemetery of the parent's choice. He said he will investigate the incident.

Youth Refuses To Talk

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — David Owen Brooks, 18, accused of taking part in a Houston homosexual ring murder by torture and death of 27 youths, refused to testify at a preliminary hearing Thursday.

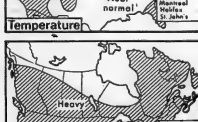
He was brought into court to testify in a preliminary hearing for Elmer Wayne Henley, 17, who will be the first of the two to be tried.

Police say both procured for Dean Corll, 33, called by police the master figure in the ring. The get $200, police say, for each youth—more for particularly handsome ones.

Brooks, tall and slender, smiled, nodded and said, "Hello," to Henley when he entered court. Henley returned his smile and greeting.

In a corridor during a recess, Bette Shirley of Brownwood, Tex., was crying. Her son, Marty Ray Jones, 18, disappeared along with Charles Cobble, 17, for whose death Henley first will be tried. Jones' body was found buried beside Cobble in a Houston boat shed.

Henley is charged with six murders but is being tried only in the Cobble case at this time. His trial is scheduled to start as soon as the pretrial hearing ends. Lawyers are trying for a six-month delay.



Brooks is charged with four murders and his trial is set for March 4.

Body Found

TORONTO (CP) — Police found the badly beaten body of a 44-year-old man Thursday at the foot of a flight of stairs in a downtown rooming house. Authorities said the body of Jean Dutesault was found after a drinking party at the house.

Charges of Sugar Combine Said Not Backed by Facts

MONTREAL (CP) — Charges that three of Eastern Canada's largest sugar refineries have violated legislation were based only on speculation and suppositions, defence counsel Pierre Lamontagne said Thursday.

Mr. Lamontagne said no evidence had been given during preliminary hearing to prove there is any actual agreement between Atlantic Sugar Refineries Co Ltd., Redpath Industries Ltd., and St. Lawrence Sugar Ltd, and SLRS Holdings Ltd.

The three companies are charged with conspiring to fix prices, restrict competition and control the sale of raw sugar between 1960 and 1973.

The alleged sugar price structure of the three companies is not proof of a conspiracy to fix prices as the Crown contends, he said.

This is a case of "parallel pricing", he said, which in Canadian, American and British jurisprudence does not constitute an offence.

The hearing continues today.

Governments Under Fire Of Dairymen

REGINA (CP) — The annual meeting of the Dairy Farmers of Canada has criticized both federal and provincial governments for problems facing the industry.

The first draft of a policy statement to be adopted by the meeting, which includes dairy representatives from all provinces, accuses governments of discouraging efficient milk producers and discriminating against sections of the industry.

The organization says present regulations which provide subsidies to a maximum of 700,000 pounds of milk from a single farm are "completely grossly misleading."

The limit is the same for individual farms, family farms, partnership farms and co-operatives.

The draft statement says recognition of co-ops and other joint enterprises would lead to the "emergence of increasingly efficient milk industry."

The statement also says returns received by producers of industrial milk and farm-separated cream are "sharply below necessary and equitable levels."

Another charge is that policies designed to help the industry in education, credit and farm labor are inadequate and often ineffective.

Parley Plans Made

BY THE CANADIAN PRESS.

Top federal and provincial officials conferred on energy policy Thursday, announced plans of future meetings and fortified their stands with statements in anticipation of next week's bi-level conference.

Prime Minister Trudeau and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed held a 1½-hour meeting in Ottawa but failed to reach an accord.

We had an agreement that what we discussed would be just between us, and no agreements were reached," said Premier Lougheed who flew to Ottawa after being unexpectedly summoned by the prime minister.

His brusque departure from the meeting and terse answers to questions by reporters were taken as signs that the Alberta-Ottawa impasse on major energy questions may be far from being resolved.

The federal export tax on crude oil and long-range federal pricing plans for oil used domestically are two major points of contention.

The export tax, now $2.50 a barrel, will rise to $6.00 Feb. 1 and no agreement has been reached on dividing the revenue when the increase takes effect.

Also in Ottawa, Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said he will go to Washington Jan. 31 for talks with William Simon, the top energy adviser to President Nixon, and other senior United States government officials.

A spokesman for Mr. Macdonald said the talks with Mr. Simon will cover "the whole bag" of current energy issues, including the export tax, the future of Canadian oil exports to the U.S. customers, development of the Alberta oil sands and Arctic reserves, and long-range oil price policies.

The three-day visit will begin with discussions with Canadian officials in Washington and end with an address to the National Press Club.

—Newfoundland Premier Frank Moores said his government believes the federal export tax is a threat to the basis of Confederation and will support Alberta and Saskatchewan at the national energy conference. He said the burden of rising fuel costs in Eastern Canada must be lightened and not with funds from a tax that is unconditional.

—Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan said he will propose an energy price stabilization fund at the conference. The fund, to be collected, from individuals and provinces according to their ability to pay, would be made available to those provinces that use higher priced oil, he suggested.

—In British Columbia, Premier Dave Barrett confirmed the $25.5-million / government purchase of 13.2 per cent of Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd., the sole carrier of natural gas in the province.

By Oswald and James Jacoby

Today's hand is almost the same as yesterday's. Again East-West have the same holding. So do South and West, except that South's spade suit is now headed by A-K instead of by Q-10.

He bids two clubs to see if North can show a four-card major, but North rebids two diamonds.

South has nine high-card points and wants to be in game so he jumps to three spades. This jump is a game force and North must bid again in spite of hold ng a minimum no trump.

There is a strong temptation to rebid three no trump with North's 4-3-3-3 distribution but North is wise enough to see that the club sun may hurt a no trump contract so North raises to four spades.

Four spades turns out to be a mighty good contract and makes easily. South worries about a possible 4-1 spade break, but since he doesn't run into one he winds up losing one trump, the ace of hearts and one club.

Three no trump would not be cold. East would open a club and the best North could do would be to collect eight tricks and wind up one trick short.

V-CARD, Sense-o

The bidding has been:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2♠	Pass
2♥	Pass	3♠	Pass
3♥	Pass	4♠	Pass
4♥	Pass	6♠	Pass
6♠	Pass

You, South, hold:
♠K J 8 5 ♥ 9 4 ♦ Q 10 8 5 ♣ K 4 3
What do you do now?

A — Bid six clubs. Your partner is making a belated slam try; we did strong spade support.

TODAY'S QUESTION

Instead of hosting four cards your partner has bid five clubs over your four clubs. What do you do now?

To Your Good Health

Allergy Possible Cause of Itching

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My ears itch so bad that it nearly drives me crazy. It seems to be just in the edge of the ear, but they get so sore they bleed.

I have had this three years and have been to three ear doctors. Have used all kinds of ointments, drops and medicine. Nothing seems to do any good. The last doctor said it was something I would have to live with.

I am a woman aged 61 and other than this in good health.— Mrs. A.D.

Itching ears are usually due either to a fungus or an allergic reaction. Medication should control a fungus, and I take it for granted that has been tried.

So I would explore the possibility of allergy, with the offending agent yet to be detected.

There are more causes than you might think. Soap not thoroughly rinsed off can be a factor. Or ear-rings. Or medication if you use it, and if you have a habit of fingering or touching your ears.

How do you wear your hair? If it covers your ears or touches them, is there anything you have been using on your hair in recent years that might cause this curious sensitivity?

There is also the possibility it is a form of neurodermatitis, sometimes seen in tense, nervous individuals, particularly women for one reason or other who scratch or touch or irritate an area of sensitive skin. Can you bring yourself to stop touching your ears at all for two or three weeks to see if it starts to help? That probably sounds easy to folks who haven't had a problem of this kind, but it takes some doing!

Steroid ointments plus mild sedation should help if this is a case of neurodermatitis, and I wonder if that combination has been tried.

Ear specialists see a good deal of this sort of thing—itching around the ears—and are pretty good at finding a remedy most of the time. If three of them haven't succeeded in your case, then I'd suggest seeing a dermatologist, whose specialty is ailments of the skin rather than of ear structure. He may well detect something that isn't as common as the usual fungus or simple allergy.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My mother-in-law said you wrote about a remedy for loss of taste but I did not see it. I have had this trouble since having the flu last spring. What medicine did you prescribe?—Mrs. S.E.

I mentioned zinc sulphate, for which success has been reported in some cases. Since it can irritate the stomach, it should be taken only under your physician's direction. Not all cases are due to zinc deficiency.

You may be interested in the following letter mailed the Saturday as yours, but from 1,000 miles away.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have heard people in Florida say they can't live up north any more because their blood is thinner now. Is this true?—Mrs. R.

No. After they get used to the year-round warm weather, it's uncomfortable to try to get used to northern winters again. But it's not the blood.

Doctor Objects Checking Gas Not His Role

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — A coroner's jury investigating 23 deaths at Sudbury General Hospital in 1973 has heard suggestions for ensuring that there is no misconnecting of medical gas supply lines in hospitals.

The proposals have been put forward by lawyers representing various interests in the first four days of the enquiry, which was touched off by at least one death described as caused by an anesthetic connected to an outlet labelled as carrying oxygen.

None of the suggestions was welcomed Thursday by Dr. M. J. Kelly, a retired anesthetist at the hospital, who said doctors should be able to take for granted that a gas delivery installation has been made properly.

However, Dr. Francis Power, chief of surgery at the hospital during the four-month period spanning the deaths, said earlier he has been giving thought recently to the question of establishing a foolproof procedure.

Dr. Power was the first to become suspicious that a crossed supply line was involved when six-year-old Catherine Dominic died in the hospital Sept. 7 after being booked to be able to take for granted that a gas delivery installation has been made properly.

One proposal from Elmer Sopha, Sudbury lawyer representing families of five persons who died, was that the chief anesthetist of a hospital should have the duty of testing gas supplies.

Mr. Sopha and lawyer D. E. Phibbs of Toronto also advocated the use of oxygen-mainly ing instruments which are available to hospitals but not generally used in the Sudbury institution.

Lawyer Donald Lilly of Toronto had two proposals: that the anesthetist try to detect leakages between gases of noxious gases by sniffing, which

Dr. Kelly considered impractical, and that installations in new rooms should be tested by hospitals before being put into use.

The Dominic girl's death occurred soon after a special procedures room had gone into operation in a new wing.

Mr. Phibbs represents the architects for the job, the Toronto firm of Govan, Kaniukerr, Langley, Keenleyside, Melick, Devonshire and Wilson. Mr. Lilly appears for the general contractor, Ellis-Don Ltd. of London, Ont.

Dr. Kelly, former chief anesthetist at the Sudbury General for 25 years before he retired, took the view that hospitals should not have to test the kind of gas coming out of an outlet.

He said he checks central line for pressure but cover for the type of gas.

"I don't think it's my function to decide what's coming out of wires."

Other testimony Thursday showed some participants leaning to the view with the Dominic girl's death may be the only one that can be associated with a faulty gas connection.

"I think the first unusual death was that of Catherine Dominic," said Dr William Lawlor, deputy chief of surgery at the hospital

He said the two other doctors said they had been informed of no similar problems with patients treated before Sept. 7, despite regular departmental reviews of case histories.

R. T. Armstrong, a Toronto lawyer representing Canadian Liquid Air Ltd., said there was an "absolutely clear" inference in the evidence to date that there was no problem with the gas system until just before Sept. 7.

Only in Miss Dominic's case has there been evidence so far of the cause of death.

Town of Durham Impresses Judge

TORONTO (CP) — The town of Durham appears to have won another round in its battle to have the regional municipality of Durham change its name.

Mr. Justice Alexander Stark, in a Judgment Thursday, said the town appears to have made a case, but that more evidence is needed before a final decision can be made.

"At least a prima facie case has been established to show that the continuance of the name Durham is objectionable on public grounds."

The town, about 90 miles south of Owen Sound, was incorporated in 1872. The region, which includes the city of Oshawa, the towns of Ajax, Newcastle, Pickering and Whitby and the townships of Brock, Scugog, and Uxbridge, was incorporated in 1973. The town areas are about 75 miles apart.

Mr. Justice Stark said "the evidence indicates a substantial amount of confusion and disturbance to business in the time since the new regional municipality was inaugurated."

He said Durham's town officials last year received a package of material requesting the council's urgent attention.

"It was sent by the ministry of treasury, economics and intergovernment affairs to the chairman of the regional municipality, but addressed to the Town of Durham."

He also said doctors in the town are receiving laboratory reports intended for the new Durham region.

"It does appear to me that any confusion and conflict could have been avoided by using the name New Durham, which would have provided a clear method of differentiation . . ."

Mr. Justice Stark added, however, he is not satisfied the evidence is sufficiently enough for a final decision and asked counsel to consider the matter and approach him later about the form a further inquiry or hearing might take.

Ex-policeman Is Found Guilty of Manslaughter

WELTHY, Ont. (CP) — An Ontario Supreme Court jury found former Toronto police officer Merle Smith, 43, guilty of manslaughter Thursday in the slaying of his wife and an Orillia contractor.

Smith originally had been charged with capital murder in the double shootings of his wife Agnes, 3, and Guido Chiavalli, 44, at the Chiavalli cottage in Orillia's Orkney Beach area.

Mr. Justice John Osler remanded Smith to Jan. 25 for sentencing.

The jury reached its verdict on the reduced charge after nearly two hours of deliberation.

Smith testified he had not intended to kill his wife but she got in his way while he was trying to shoot Mr. Chiavalli who was found with 10 bullets in his body.

Mrs. Smith left her husband about two weeks before the shootings and Smith told the court that Mr. Chiavalli said that even if his wife did come back, Smith would not afford him.

The accused said this remark caused him to lose control.

The lawyer said Chiavalli's remark would have upset an "ordinary, reasonable man."

Crown attorney Bruce Affleck said the only aspect of the defence's case jurors had to consider was provocation.

"If no provocation . . . no defence."

'Tiny Amounts' Would Provide Protection

Lewis Wants Severance Pay Fund Set Up

EXETER, Ont. (CP) — Ontario industries should contribute "tiny amounts" to a centrally-administered provincial government agency to ensure that workers of a shutdown plant receive severance pay, Stephen Lewis said Thursday.

Mr. Lewis, leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, said that such a fund might be operated by the staff of the labor ministry's employment standards branch.

He said the contributions need not be large because the number of bankruptcy cases in industry are few enough to count on the fingers of your hand."

Mr. Lewis made the proposal in reference to the Nov. 27 shutdown of Hall Lamp Co. of Canada just north of London. A total of 400 production and office workers lost their jobs.

The company said the shutdown was temporary, but Mr. Lewis said this was an attempt by it to evade legal responsibilities to provide 12 weeks of severance pay to the workers.

Under existing laws, secured creditors of a bankrupt firm are given preference over the severance pay of workers.

Mr. Lewis told unemployed workers for Hall Lamp, with whom he met, that he would continue to urge the government to close what he described as loopholes in the labor code in reference to severance pay.

Sirica Suspects Illegal Acts

Damaged Tapes Case Given to Grand Jury

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing the "distinct possibility of unlawful conduct on the part of one or more persons," a federal judge has referred the case of the non-existent and damaged Watergate tapes to a grand jury.

U.S. District Judge John Sirica took the action Friday, saying he would consider it "a dereliction of duty to terminate the present inquiry without further action of any sort."

Within an hour, the White House issued a statement saying "it would be wrong to conclude on the basis of Judge Sirica's decision that any individual within the White House is guilty of impropriety or wrongdoing in the handling of the Watergate tapes."

"Further, the American people should bear in mind that the focus of the investigation by the federal grand jury is primarily how the tape may have been erased, not what the tape contained."

James St. Clair, the Boston lawyer who recently took over control of the White House legal team working on the tapes case, called Sirica's move "entirely appropriate." He noted that White House lawyers had recommended such a move on Nov. 21, the day they notified the judge of the existence of the gap.

When asked whether the president would testify if called by the grand jury, St. Clair said: "If a subpoena is issued in him, we'll deal with it at that time."

Sirica announced his decision on the 19th day of hearings that began last Oct. 31, into what had happened to tapes of subpoenaed presidential conversations about Watergate.

On Oct. 30, the White House informed Sirica that two of the subpoenaed conversations in the president had agreed to turn over to the court apparently never had been recorded.

They were a telephone conversation on June 20, 1972 between Nixon and former attorney-general John Mitchell and an April 15, 1973, meeting between the president and former White House counsel John Dean.

The White House said the June 20 conversation with Mitchell took place on a telephone not installed in the taping system and that the April 15 meeting was unrecorded due to a breakdown in the system.

Far more difficult to explain was the 18½-minute gap in the tape of a June 20, 1972, conversation between the president and then-White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman. It took place three days after the break-in at Democratic national committee headquarters and the obliterated segment contained all references to the incident.

Rose Mary Woods, the president's personal secretary, has testified that she thought she might have caused part of that gap when she accidentally pressed the record button last Oct. 1.

But technical experts who conducted tests on the tape to try to find the cause of the gap reported to Sirica Jan. 15 that what Miss Woods described could not have created the marks they found within the obliterated segment.

The experts testified that the record button had to be pushed at least five, and possibly more times, to have left the electronic signs they discovered.

Israeli-Syrian Negotiations Expected to Prove Difficult

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With the signing of a troop disengagement pact between Israel and Egypt complete, Henry Kissinger now turns his attention to separating Israeli forces on the Israeli-Syrian front.

Middle East experts predict the Israeli-Syrian negotiations will be the hardest yet for the U.S. state secretary who spent the last week shuttling between Israel and Egypt to help reach an agreement along the Suez front.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said Friday that Syria has boycotted the peace talks because of Israel's failure to withdraw from Syrian territory.

Kissinger promised to work for an Israeli-Syrian pact "with the same dedication and goodwill" that brough the Israeli-Egyptian disengagement agreement. Friday.

The semi-official Cairo newspaper Al Ahram said Kissinger and Sadat talked with Assad by telephone Friday from Aswan and said Kissinger guaranteed to bring about a Syrian-front disengagement similar to the Egyptian-Israeli pact.

Sadat flew to Saudi Arabia Friday night, and planned talks in the Persian Gulf oil states of Kuwait, Abu Dhabi, Qatar and Bahrain before arriving in Damascus Sunday. It was not known if Kissinger and Sadat will meet together with Assad.

Sadat's conversations with leaders of the oil-producing states were expected to include whether the Arab oil squeeze should be eased because of the Israeli-Egyptian agreement. Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani said after the agreement was announced that his country still will not increase oil production until Israel evacuates "all Arab territories seized in 1967."

The Israeli-Egyptian agreement requires Israeli forces to withdraw from the Egyptian side of the Suez canal and back 10 to 20 miles from the east bank of the waterway to a jagged line that runs from Gidi and Mitla passes. The withdrawal is to start within seven days and be completed within 40 days.

Egyptian troops will be permitted to remain on the east bank of the canal, with United Nations soldiers between them and the Israelis.

The size of the Egyptian force to be permitted and the location of the Egyptian lines were not announced, but the Israeli radio said Egypt will be limited to 7,000 troops and 30 tanks. The radio said Egyptian heavy weapons and ground-to-air missiles must be withdrawn seven miles from the canal.

Fourteen were judged unacceptable as they tended to smear more than 10 per cent of the wiper surface area in cold temperatures.

Wandering At Inquest Will End

SUDBURY (CP) — An inquest into 23 deaths in Sudbury General Hospital, which has been sig-zagging on a puzzling course for a week, will start off Monday under a "no-deviations" edict from the presiding coroner.

Dr. Ross Bennett, deputy supervising coroner for Ontario, handed down the word late Friday after five days of evidence which has been skipping back and forth between medical and mechanical topics without touching on several basic questions before the inquiry.

The inquest has not yet received firm evidence of the cause of death of any of the victims and has been given only second-hand information that one of them, six-year-old Catherine Donaldson, died from getting a lethal dose of anesthetic out of an oxygen line in a new wing of the hospital last Sept. 7.

Guns His Hobby

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dion Martin, son of entertainer Dean Martin, has been arraigned on a charge of unlawful possession of seven machine-guns and an anti-tank cannon.

Charles Weedman, lawyer for the 23-year-old Martin, told reporters after the arraignment Friday that his client collected guns as a hobby and "is not a criminal."

Monetary System Reform Delayed

ROME (AP) — After a weekend meeting of state interpreters, International Monetary Fund, indications are that reform of the world's monetary system is still at least two years away.

Officially, the IMF target date of July 31 still stands for agreement on a more stable monetary system to finance world trade. But IMF experts now believe the current stopgap measures will be extended to smooth world trade. They have in recent months been a victim of trade disruptions caused by the skyrocketing price of oil.

The oil price increases are expected to add $25 billion to the import bills of countries that buy oil from other countries. And unless there is progress at next month's crisis meeting of top oil exporters, the oil issue may continue to block monetary reform, the experts say.

The ministers of the Committee of 20 — group set up by the 126-country International Monetary Fund (IMF) to negotiate monetary reform — studied a proposal by IMF managing director Johannes Witteveen for international borrowing arrangements to help countries pay for their oil imports.

They agreed that this proposal for a new IMF borrowing facility, through which funds can be channelled back from the oil-exporting countries to the importers, should be "urgently explored."

But in a communique they also expressed reservations about the plan on the grounds that it posed operational problems and would be only a partial measure in view of the magnitude of the balance of payments problems resulting from the oil costs.

The cautious wording of the communique on this point seemed to reflect the thinking of the United States and West Germany which insist on the two-day conference that agreement on the proposal might appear as acceptance of the unilateral oil price rises.

U.S. Treasury Secretary George Shultz reiterated after the conference that the U.S. regarded the financial problems caused by the oil situation as unmanageable for many countries. There would have to be a reduction in these sudden price increases.

Nixon Worried Because 'People Believe Oil Crisis Is Phoney

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is disturbed that some people in the United States believe the oil shortage doesn't exist or represents a conspiracy by oil producers backed by the administration, the president's top domestic adviser says.

Whether the energy crisis is real or phoney is expected to be a major topic in Nixon's nationwide radio broadcast shortly after 11 a.m. EST today.

The president will "attempt to lay to rest some of the confusion," Kenneth Cole, Nixon's new domestic policy assistant, said Friday.

"There is a genuine shortage and nobody is conspiring to make people's lives miserable," Cole said.

And the administration, rejected reports that the Mideast disengagement may lead to the end of the Arab oil embargo and said the embargo is nearing full effectiveness.

Nixon held separate hour-long meetings with Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott and John Rhodes, Republican leader in the House of Representatives. In addition, he planned a Monday morning meeting on energy with congressional leaders of both parties.

Congress put off final action on an energy bill during the closing hours of the 1973 session. It reconvenes Monday.

The Federal Energy Office (FEO) said leakage of Arab oil through the embargo in the United States is nearing zero. However, reduced demand is close to covering the resulting shortage, the FEO said.

The deputy administrator of the FEO, John Sawhill, told a House subcommittee that spot shortages of heating oil may occur by mid-March, if the embargo is fully effective and the U.S. experiences a bitter winter.

So far, however, an unexpected buildup in inventory levels has been caused by warmer-than-normal weather, public conservation efforts and some leakage in the Arab embargo.

Vietnamese and Chinese Battle for Islands

SAIGON (AP) — South Vietnamese and Chinese ground and naval forces battled today in the disputed Paracel Islands in the South China Sea, the South Vietnamese command reported.

A command spokesman said one South Vietnamese patrol boat carrying 100 persons was hit by a missile from a Chinese ship and "we fear that it has been sunk."

Unconfirmed reports said three other South Vietnamese ships may have been hit. The command said two of its navy commandos were killed and two wounded in ground fighting on Duncan Island in the coral chain 250 miles off the South Vietnamese coast.

The command also said a Chinese patrol boat with 50 to 60 persons aboard sank after being set afire by the South Vietnamese destroyer Tran Khanh Du.

South Vietnam said Wednesday that the Chinese landed fishermen on the islands which are 175 miles southeast of the Chinese island of Hainan and are claimed by both countries.

Lt.-Col. Le Trong Hein, the chief spokesman for the South Vietnamese command, said that since Friday, Chinese vessels have been trying to "run into our ships" in the area. On Thursday, he said, South Vietnamese navy commandos landed on the islands, but the fishermen had pulled out leaving only their flag.

"Then all hell erupted when a Chinese patrol boat fired on the Tran Khanh Du and "we fired back and set the Chinese boat afire," Hein said. The Trans Khanh Du is reported to have received "light" damage to its superstructure and no casualties.

The Saigon command said China now has 11 warships in the area, including guided-missile destroyers equipped with the 22-mile-range Komar and Styx missiles. Spokesmen refused to say how many South Vietnamese ships are in the area, but said the Chinese have the most ships.

In the ground action, Hein said that a Chinese force of about 600 men landed on the South Vietnamese off the island of Duncan and that the South Vietnamese navy was shelling the island. There were no reports of Chinese casualties on the island.

Hien said South Vietnamese forces met no resistance when they landed on four other islands—Robert, Money and Pattle—making up the archipelago.

Tax Time Nears

Like everyone else H. R. Hennessey pays income tax.

Only, the job that generates his taxes demands more tax information than most - much more.

He has a bulky blue book as a basic guide, and a bookcase filled with bulky folders.

The blue-covered book is Canada's Income Tax Act which is Mr. Hennessey's working reference as director of the national revenue department's Belleville district tax office.

Chamber Week Set for April

The week of April 21 to 27 has been set aside as Chamber of Commerce Week in Belleville.

And the organization will be holding its annual dinner on February 22.

This was brought up at the chamber's monthly meeting held yesterday at the Bank of Montreal board room. The meeting, conducted by president George Thompson, marked the first full meeting of the new chamber executive.

The chamber is one of several organizations in the city that will be taking part in Belleville's centennial plans for 1978.

A steering committee has been set up with members from the chamber, city council, labor council, industry, the Hastings County Historical society, Museum Board, recreation department and the tall merchants, that will meet January 29 at 8 p.m. in city council chambers.

Also, the problem of store closing hours will be discussed at a breakfast meeting at the Four Seasons Motel on January 29 starting at 7:30 a.m.

Letters have been sent out by the chamber to representatives from the Quinte Mall, the East End Plaza and downtown merchants who have been invited to attend to examine the issue.

He needs it all. His job basically is to help all taxpayers within 8,700 square miles populated by 350,000 file their returns.

For other taxpayers, tackling tax problems is much easier, says Mr. Hennessey now being posted out of Belleville after six years.

What most wage earners need do, advises the chartered accountant with 27 years experience in national revenue administration, is simple:

Read carefully the instructions in the booklet included with income tax returns mailed in Belleville this week.

"Sit down, take time, and read," he counsels.

If that doesn't clear things, says the director, call his office where a staff of 150 - including extra help brought in as tax time approaches - is ready to help.

There'll always be problems to solve and the office gets its fair share of inquiries, he admits. Belleville is tax administration centre for a region that reaches from Napanee to Bowmanville and northeast beyond Peterborough.

Nonetheless, claims the director, the system introduced last year with the new tax act are part of a centralized processing system that seems operating fairly smoothly.

The new method also produced different problems.

"But really the change went amazingly well . . . a lot easier than estimated. But, it was very planned."

A Marlilmer, he joined the service in 1947 and now is returning to serve in St. John, N.B.

Appointment of Mr. Hennessey's successor has not yet been announced.

Drugs No Answer Audience Is Told

The world might want an answer to its problems, but it won't find it by having a smoke, taking a drink or popping a pill.

That was the brunt of the message inthe last two film presentations and the question period of the drug education program, No Easy Answers, held at the Corby Public Library Thursday.

The library ended their support drug program yesterday when an audience of about 80 people came to watch the two films, Us and Almost Everyone Does, and to listen to Belleville Police Inspector Ralph Blatchford field questions on the general problems of drug abuse in Belleville.

"People seem more interested in trying to change the way they feel than in trying to cope with the ordinary everyday stresses of life," Inspector Blatchford told the audience. They usually do that by taking some chemical. Drug abuse occurs when a person always deal with his problems by turning to a chemical stimulant or depressant for relief. What things, drink or take can change the way they feel but it doesn't necessarily make them happy."

The films underlined the inspector's point. Us, showed the audience the strange paradox of a drug-dependent culture that has businessmen confiding their wives for taking barbiturates while they themselves get drunk at lunch. Young students who are getting drunk on beer discuss the hard drug culture and high school student smoke marijuana while they discuss their parents ife style.

The film, Almost Everyone Does, covered much the same ground as the other film and also included period but laid a greater stress on the individual damage harm on younger persons.

The child's would is a literal "hell" the film told the audience. "What he sees, feels and hears, he accepts as true. If a child is told his mother's cigarettes keep her calm; that pills help his father to unwind and that special tablets will solve your adolescent problems, then he is apt to demand the same chemical solutions for same chemical solutions for his problems when he gets older."

Break-in Foiled

An attempt to break into an apartment at 61 North Front St. was foiled Friday night when the would-be burglar failed to get that door pried with a safety chain.

Belleville Police Chief Douglas Crosbie said this morning the would-be burglar ripped the lock from the door frame but failed to gain entry.

Radio Club Seeks Members

Quinte Amateur Radio Club will help provide communication for Ontario Car Rally Feb. 9-3, an event in which about 200 Canadian and foreign cars will participate.

The club, comprised of about 40 members, is dedicated to providing communications for local public service groups. Any group planning an event that could use a communications link-up is asked to contact Robert Brain at 962-7717.

About three-quarters of the members of the Quinte club are licenced ham radio operators. The club welcomes new members, whether licenced or not. The meeting place is Loyalist College, room 235 and meetings are held the first Wednesday of every month.

W. B. Doubleday, retiring department of communications inspector was the guest speaker at the first meeting of 1974.

Employee Retires

Mr. Lupenette retired from International Lock Dec. 29 and is now employed at Quinte.

Present were Mrs. Lupenette and daughter, Mrs. Howard (Arlene LaGuit and Mr. LaGuit. A son, Ronald, and his wife were unable to be present. Representatives from the local room union presented Mr. Lupenette with two cheques.

A rear end two car collision on Pine St. on Friday afternoon resulted in $400 damage to the vehicles and a complaint by one driver of whiplash.

Laura Alma Scott, 63, of 11 Albion St. complained of pain and told Belleville police she will seek medical assistance.

The Scott vehicle was stopped on Pine St. to discharge a passenger when a car, driven by Reg Ross McKenzie, 55, of 161 Station St. slid into the rear of the Scott vehicle.

Snowmobiles: The Problem Of Sidewalk Cowboys

By MARGARET HAYLOCK

PICTON — Sidewalk cowboys of the snowmobile set have forced town council to seek a new bylaw regulating operation of motorized snow vehicles. The existing control by-law is considered inadequate because it does not define sidewalks as off limits to these machines.

The decision to put sharper teeth in a new bylaw followed a report from Picton police chief George Pitt that some snowmobilers were riding on unshoveled sidewalks.

Chief Pitt remarked that he has assigned an officer to go on door-to-door asking Picton residents to clear their walks. But should they fail to cooperate he doubts they could be prosecuted effectively. He lacks a signed copy of the existing bylaw requiring ratepayers to shovel their walks and is skeptical that the order would stand up in court.

Town clerk Andrew Jarvis has confirmed that there is no signed copy of the original bylaw as it was consolidated with several others in 1936.

Council, in the form of Chief Pitt's report, also is seeking a new bylaw governing snow clearance by property owners and tenants.

Since council does not meet again until Feb. 4, the new bylaw must wait at least another two weeks for approval. In the meantime, the pedestrian is confronted with a double-barrelled annoyance.

It is not enough that he must wade through over-the-boot top drifts he must also jibe over these unshoveled walks prepared to dodge, at a moment's notice, from the path of the maverick snowmobiler.

Although many property owners do clear their walks or have the shovelled, others leave the snow piled high with no thought for pedestrians.

Residents walking in the winter months can travel on the streets themselves but must keep a sharp eye for cars and snowmobiles.

Since council's first bylaw concerning snow clearance from sidewalks it dated 1910 it would seem that, in 64 years, some progress would have been made toward keeping walks shovelled in the winter months.

For the past several years there have been complaints in Picton about snowmobilers who play games of tag through the streets late at night.

Still, council has failed to demand a by-law that places strong enough restrictions on snowmobile control.

Winter walking conditions can be hazardous enough when walks are shovelled. But the dangers are unnecessarily increased when snowmobiles sail over snow-clogged sidewalks.

In considering a bylaw for snowmobile control council has listened on more than one occasion to the presentations of local snowmobile clubs. Club members drafted a code of practice and offered it as security against irresponsible use of these machines on Picton streets.

Obviously these sportsman are well intention and sincere. But they cannot guarantee the conduct of every individual who owns or operates a snowmobile. For this reason the control bylaw approved by council should not be overlooked.

One councillor wisely suggested that if all sidewalks were cleared of snow each snowfall snowmobilers could not caper over them.

It seems apparent that Picton if equipped with an adequate snow-removal by law would have fewer problems with snowmobilers in the streets.

Councillor Larry Richardson scored an excellent point when he asked fellow councillors if the town planned to wait for a serious snowmobile accident or possibly a fatality, before taking action to control these vehicles on the streets.

There are many suitable snowmobiling areas near Picton and there is no excuse for daredevils who roar their machines around the block for an evening's fun.

The conduct of such soulless persons cannot be guaranteed by any club but should be curbed by town council.

The time has come for town councillors to take a long hard look at bylaws that will ensure sidewalk clearance and the elimination of snowmobile traffic on the sidewalks.

Plan: When Are The Teeth Fitted

By COLIN BRUCE

We keep hearing about a set of teeth that will provide the teeth to our provincially-approved financial plan. When are we going to see them?

This week council gave its wholehearted approval to a shopping mall for the town's west end. This approval would be fine had it not been tainted with an undisclosed report from the Quinte Planning Board's deputy planning director.

In a nutshell, that means if we had the teeth to our official plan, putting the mall on that section of Dundas St. would have precipitated an Ontario Municipal Board hearing, public meetings and a time-consuming amendment to the plan.

We are assured the bylaws are council meeting and only councillors received a copy of his two-page report.

Now, no matter what bylaws are passed, the building permit is on its way and land-use restrictions in the official plan do not apply.

It's a good piece of development and the bylaws will probably be changed to allow it anyway.

While council has raised the development fuss which, in fact, stretches the downtown in an eastward direction, some week ago, with official plan in hand, council told a local developer he couldn't stretch the downtown westward with a positive office building.

Council argued that major development be centred in the existing downtown area, revitalizing and rejuvenating its appeal for shoppers.

I would like to see those bylaws on the books. We spent a lot of money making a good official plan, one that will keep the town going in the right direction.

QUINTE COUNTRY

Tyendinaga--The Land Is In Demand Again

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

MELROSE — Even in a time where energy problems are the popular preoccupation, this area is unlikely to fuel excitement as a source of oil.

It did once — at least hereabouts. But the intertalk hopes of quick riches to be reaped below ground are only a threadbare memory, worn away with the decades.

The lust for a refreshing alternative to big-city bustle is putting premium demand on rural holdings. Tyendinaga hasn't escaped.

"We get a terrific number of inquiries every month about property," says Bill—Wark. "And there's been quite a few changes of property in recent years."

The changes extend to prices, which have paced demand.

Ironically, derelict acreages emptied of settlement by owners who found them economically impossible, now count among the township's richest resources.

Picturesque Tyendinaga, with its stone houses and lilacs, its landscapes shaggy, stream-laced, often rocky in prime land — for its own sake.

Once it was what that land could produced that lured Hastings County's southeast township.

Tyendinaga was created from a huge 1120 land surrender by the neighboring Bay of Quinte Mohawks. The new enclave took its name from the Indian warrior Joseph Brant — Tweydenaga — of his people.

By that time the Mohawks had played a 999- year lease with a businessman who built Picton and there is no record for daredevils who roar their machines around the block for an evening's fun.

The conduct of such soulless persons cannot be guaranteed by any club but should be curbed by town council.

The time has come for town councillors to take a long hard look at bylaws that will ensure sidewalk clearance and the elimination of snowmobile traffic on the sidewalks.

The township spurted ahead, despite the fact much of its farmland was sub-marginal, Lumbering was significant; good markets guereteed farm profits.

Sawmills, grist mills, small factories were started. By 1870 Tyendinaga had 7,000 people — a population bigger than Belleville's.

Then a decline began. During the latter half of the century lumbering deteriorated; competition discouraged farmers working marginal lands. Today, the population is about 2,600, says Mr. Walsh.

In the early 1900s there was a rekindling of economic prospects—of sorts. It was dynamite, and short.

Its focus was in a farmer's field a few paces from the third concession across from the township hall. Geological reports claimed oil might be present in the vicinity. There was a flurry of excitement, says Charles Long, township councillor and former county warden. His father was among locals who bought shares. There was drilling, but somehow the boom never became as much as a whisper. All that was left was the drill shaft.

About a decade ago there was some brief exploration — apparently for natural gas. But today the site of the boom-that-never-was still lies silent, 10 below the mouth.

Now it's the land itself where the money is. Holdings, long neglected have been snapped up for personal retention. Also by buyers from big-city dwellers, seeking a retreat from the metropolis where they work. In recent years up to 5,000 acres in Tyendinaga's northeast corner have changed ownerships. A creek enhances that attraction — and the price, apparently.

Once a farmer might have traded off a parcel to another — a matter of a couple of thousand," says Mr. Walsh. "Now 100 acres with a creek running through it — $20,000 is no big problem to get."

Another Tyendinaga native says a farm near the township's western boundary is reported to have changed hands $40,000.

Today, Tyendinaga is still farmed. But many of its natives also hold jobs in bigger Quinte-Kingston area industrial communities. Much of their agriculture is confined to beef cattle, some sheep.

For the newer comers, whether resident or merely weekenders or summer vacationers, the township has much to commend it, says Councillor Long.

For one thing it has fast links to major communications. Highways 401, 2, 37 are reached by good, paved county roads.

But new residents, resetting properties neglected for years can also pose something of a problem for a municipality whose population is thin, widely scattered. It takes 123 miles of township road to link them together — and services, particularly in winter, must be kept up.

Yet, the administrative system probably explains much of Tyendinaga's attraction to the urbanized 1970s, indicates the councillor.

The land "gives them some room, some place to move around, for the children in particular. Some, they do more for their youngsters", says Councillor Long.

With the late 19th-century decline in economic prospects, the township's population dropped, its settlements breached with vacancies — and the quiet evolved on demand. Without its oil boom prevent-day Tyendinaga benefits from the sequences of its past.

DECISION

Ottawa, December 21, 1973

PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT
CARRIAGE OF CBLFT AND GLOBAL COMMUNICATIONS

The Commission's Policy Statement on Cable Television dated July 31, 1971, sets forth the basic rules the television services which all cable television systems are required to provide as a matter of priority.

A number of licensees in the Toronto and Hamilton areas have applied to the Commission for an extension of the temporary authority for the carriage of CBLFT, Channel 25 on one or more channels using the phase-lock technique until December 31, 1974 or the commencement of transmission of television signals from the CN Tower, whichever occurs earlier.

All of the licensees have made a firm commitment to implement expanded channel capacity in the near future in order to enable the carriage of all priority Canadian television signals on unimpaired channels without deleting services which have been provided to subscribers. However, due to certain difficulties, many of the licensees are unable immediately to implement expanded capacity.

Relocation of the Toronto transmitters to the CN Tower on or before December 31, 1974 will increase the signal strength of CBLT and CFTO-TV and further impair cable system channels 5 and 9 so that the phase-lock technique for CBLFT will be ineffective for those channels on most systems.

At the Public Hearings licensees maintained that the carriage of CBLFT using the phase-lock technique has been satisfactory. Licensees also claimed that a minimum number of complaints have been received and that in each of these cases remedial action was taken. The Commission will accept the use of the phase-lock technique as a temporary expedient until the end of 1974 provided licensees continue to provide remedial action where necessary.

Citizens Cable T.V. Limited (Burlington, Ont.)
Aurora Cable TV Limited (Aurora, Ont.)
Metro Cable TV Limited (Burlington, Ont.)

Cable television carriage of Global Communications represents a unique situation since Global's coverage area is all of Southern Ontario. Since the Global system consists of a number of transmitters broadcasting on different channel frequencies, it is desirable, wherever possible, for the system to be carried on a uniform cable channel in order to enable easy identification. Channel 3 appears to be the optimum choice since it is, or can be made, available on most cable systems. The Commission indicated in letters sent to cable television licensees on September 19, 1973 that Global should be carried on a common channel wherever practical and that the best choice is channel 3.

The Commission requires licensees to provide for the carriage of Global on channel 3 except in cases where distribution on channel 3 is not technically feasible or where it would result in undesirable disruption to a local station or to the locally programmed channel.

The part of the applications made by the following licensees for the carriage of Global on channel 3 are approved:

Britain's Troubles

Just how badly off are the British these days? What with fuel shortages and the coal miners refusing to work overtime the impression gained is that the country is on its last legs.

Yet the British carry on, for the most part unruffled. Visitors continue to be impressed by their general unflappability while pointing out that Prime Minister Heath comes out smiling from talks with the union people — talks which have failed for the umpteenth time to produce any settlement.

And while there is also talk of a snap election, it is said Mr. Heath will hold off still longer, which must surely mean he has some confidence not only in an ultimate settlement of the miners' dispute but in the essential economic stability of the country.

We hear of Britain's huge trading imbalances, yet on the other hand there was the British capital we mentioned recently which a British Columbia entrepreneur obtained readily for his earth-moving operations when the money was not forthcoming from Canadian banks.

Still, how much better things would be if the country were running at full capacity. There was a time when the slogan "Buy British" was a symbol of quality, and this remains true in many spheres. At the same time the British are being outsold by the Japaneso and the Germans. This is very much the case where cars are concerned. Is it possible though that Britain is so badly off that even Uganda's President Amin was moved recently to offer the country food and meat and, get this, $1,300 of his own savings.

Should Canada lend a hand, remembering for example that 30 years ago, while this country was helping mightily with the war effort, British reciprocated too, for example by handing over two cruisers and two destroyers to the Royal Canadian Navy?

But surely things are not that bad. Britain wants no handouts. Nor is it seeking them. It does not even need the somewhat ostentatious "I am a proud Canadian" (Briton, American or whoever) type of slogan being sported in this country these days.

Britannia may be a little dowdy these days, but we are not convinced the sun has finally set on her rugged shores.

Assistant Deputy Leaks A Tidbit Or Two

Ottawa's Lotus-Eaters And A Little-Known Bureaucrat

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — Ever wonder how the public service grows and grows and grows?

Its payroll carries not the 231,756 the Public Service Commission trumpets, but 253,746, according to a document filed by Commissioner Peter Dwyer Council President Allan MacEachen.

And there is every expectation that this year, like others before it, the total will grow by another 2,000 to 3,000.

It was all but shot down, the whole immense federal headquarters apparatus, from December 21 to January 3, as thousands of government employees quite legally took off accumulated time to stretch the Christmas-New Year break into a two-week non-stop Winter holiday.

And unless you lived in the Capital and saw the empty public service parking lots you hardly noticed.

But back to the growth of the public service.

Assistant deputy minister, Bureau of Intellectual Property, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department,' in a year-end letter to his staff, drops the odd clue as to how government quietly has managed to become one of the great Canadian growth industries.

Not you did not know — unless you are one of the 500-odd who work for it—that Consumer and Corporate Affairs had such a division as a Bureau of Intellectual Property.

Or that it had its very own assistant deputy minister.

But the Bureau's listings take up a full page in the new government telephone directory, although they bear trace of it in the various divisions of Consumer and Corporate Affairs listed in the Finance Department's Estimates.

Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the usual one deputy minister and three other assistant deputies, but only the assistant deputy of the Intellectual Property Bureau wrote a staff letter that obviously went astray.

"Our work," he writes, "is complex and up to now has been relatively unknown to the public and deemed politically sterile."

Out of it all came the Intellectual Property Bureau.

That much accomplished, more had to be done, and to watch over "the economic effect in Canada of all legal monopolies and procedures relating to patents, trademarks, copyrights and industrial design," a new division was formed.

It is the "Research and International Affairs Branch," and writes the assistant deputy, its "first priorities are to expand the research activity to include additional lawyers and economists," all high-priced talent.

The assistant deputy confesses to "the need for communication with the staff of almost once a year" and in vain heard the Capital for a "suitable place for a large gathering—considering the auditorium of the National Archives, the Dunvarty Hotel, and even the Carrier theatre! But to no avail."

Even so, things are going very well.

For, reports the assistant deputy, "the initial shock wave (of moving office) from Ottawa (to Hull) is, I hope, retreating. New quarters, new routes to the office, open (working) landscaping, boutiques beneath us, beer and wine in the cafeteria are all new sensations ... to date we have survived. Let us continue then to live and relax. Any work of course."

Does it all mean, he asks, "an approach to a more civilized attitude towards employees and their hours of work, heralding an even more sympathetic approach — a flexible work week?"

The Smoking Habit

A note from the Hastings-Prince Edward Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association reminds us that this is National Education Week on Smoking.

Enclosed with it is an extract from the American Lung Association Bulletin which goes in part: Remember when cigaret carations were the perfect Christmas gift . . . when people thought non-smokers were squares and goody-goodys . . . when a doctor might offer a cigaret to patients to help calm their nerves . . . when people always said 'No' if someone asked, 'do you mind if I smoke?'

Unhappily, while a great many people have given up smoking as a result of anti-smoking campaigns, stressing as they do its harmful effect on health, countless others, notably women and young people have taken up the habit.

How to get the message to these people must be the concern of the Government and organizations like the Respiratory Disease Association. Clearly a great many persons either are not getting the message, or are ignoring it.

A Free Man

Former Governor-General Roland Michener served his country well, in the role of the Queen's representative in Canada, and most actively at that.

Not many men having served in such a capacity for more than six years and reached the age of 73 would be able to contemplate this late retirement with the words: "I'm a free man again."

Mr. Michener was not being derogatory about the high office he had just vacated. Rather he was looking forward to active retirement free of the formality and responsibilities that go with the vice regal role. And this, unlike the Queen herself, who as her former representative noted, "can never shed her royalty."

Tunisia and Libya Make Strange Bedfellows

By JOHN D. HARBON
Foreign Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

The announced merger of Tunisia and Libya into the proposed Arab Islamic Republic has to be the strangest and to many the most unworkable of the several schemes of political union attempted in the Arab world since 1960.

It means the union of the two Arab nations which are perhaps most diametrically different of all the nations in the Islamic world.

Let's begin with leadership. Tunisia's President Habib Bourguiba is the essence of conciliation and moderation where Israel is concerned and believes in final rapprochement between the Arabs and the Jews in the Middle East.

Libya's fiery and fanatical President Moammar Khadafy is a 33-year-old army colonel with a near-paranoic hatred of the Israelis. His country apparently has become the source of finance and arms export to the various terrorist outfits in Ireland and the Middle East.

Compared to oil-rich Libya which threatens to cut off the taps for the next few years and coast with its staggering oil earnings, Tunisia is a poor country, rich in historic sites, fine scenery and a mixed European-Arab population many of whom are just as much at home speaking French or Italian as Arabic.

In Libya, what little Italian had been left from the colonial period has been ruthlessly expunged. And President Khadafy in another of his unpredictable moves, recently forbade the entry into Libya of any foreigner whose passport was not written in Arabic!

Only last month a Canadian group of businessmen and newspaper editors visited Tunisia as guests of the president and left soon to look at that country's potential for expanding its tourist trade already growing, and its exports to Canada.

Officially, Canada has smiled on the Tunisian experiment in racial and linguistic harmony, and in the country's bilingual nature—French and Arabic—something of the Canadian model in Islamic North Africa.

This mix of cultures has made it easy for this delightful but small Arab nation to understand both European and Islamic views of the world, the Israeli crisis and one presumes the oil crisis too.

The two previous Middle East efforts at the merger of national entities did not amount to much. In 1961, Egypt and Syria attempted the famous merger of the United Arab Republic — a name which lingered long after that merger broke up.

This union was even less likely than the Tunisian-Libyan one. Egypt and Syria are geographically remote from each other, separated by ocean and desert from common boundaries. Each speaks a different dialect of Arabic and appears to have little in common other than hatred of Israel.

The late Egyptian-Libyan union of about a year ago has come to naught mainly because of the widening differences between the extremist Khadafy and the more moderate President Anwar Sadat about coping with Israel.

And at present Egypt is involved in an activity Khadafy says he would never do — meet Israelis face to face and seek conciliation.

The last ruler who tried to merge Tunis and Libya was the late Italian Fascist dictator, Benito Mussolini, who wished to add the then French possession of Tunis to the then Italian colony of Libya, but died before he ended that possibility as well as his North African empire.

Education And Local Autonomy

By DON O'BEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — The biggest crisis in Bob Nixon's political philosophy has been showing signs.

Since the days of his first ambitions to head the party the veteran leader has had a fetish for local autonomy.

He has carried it to extreme lengths. No matter how practical or impractical it may be, he wants local people to be able to run everything they possibly can.

His latest sortie is in education spending.

As part of a speech on the question of denying teachers the right to strike he points out that education spending is governed by provincial spending ceilings.

And he declares: "Expenditures on education should be controlled by the democratically-elected school trustees who should be free to finance higher school costs from municipal taxes and face the music" at the elections for the actions."

Well lord help us all if this ever happens.

There are at least four reasons why it would be invited disaster to have education spending controlled locally.

One is that 60 per cent of the money they are controlling, and spending, is provincial. And to local boards couldn't be expected to be too careful about spending provincial money.

A second is that though they are "democratically elected" it usually is puny "democracy."

A third is that boards are now tending to get loaded with educators as trustees and most of them certainly can't be looked to to foster economy.

The fourth is that boards really aren't effectively responsible to the public for their spending. They get their money through local councils, which must give them whatever they ask for. And if they spend it acutely it is the council that gets the blame from the public.

There is no question that local autonomy is a good thing.

The closer to the people that government is the better it should be.

School Boards In Ontario Might Form An Alliance

Peterborough Examiner

A prediction by the superintendent of the Four-County Separate School Board, Fraser Beegle, that school boards throughout Ontario will move close to a provincial alliance reflects a growing feeling among trustees.

For the past few years, trustees have been caught in the middle of a financial and, to some extent, philosophical dispute between the provincial government and the province's teachers.

The teachers have been able to speak through their provincial associations, to respond with a unified voice to changes in policy at Queen's Park.

Like the teachers, trustees have also been frustrated and pined changes in the decisions made at Queen's Park. Unlike their employees, however, their ties with their provincial association are loose and informal. The unified voice that might have given the local boards more influence in government policy has been lacking.

Trustees are now in a difficult position. Although the provincial government has emphasized its desire to decentralize the responsibilities and functions of many of its departments, the actual trend has been toward an erosion of local power in educational matters.

The reorganization of the school system along county lines has left local bodies with new problems to solve. At the same time, however, the province has restricted spending in many areas.

Expenses have increased, reliance on grants has increased, teachers' political power has increased. School boards are left to cope with the changes as best they can.

The conflict over teachers' contracts this year has probably sharpened an existing awareness that the individual school boards must unite.

Apart from the obvious financial considerations, there are also the massive changes that are taking place in educational philosophy and school curriculum.

On their own, the individual boards often lack the knowledge and tools to properly assess proposed changes.

The concerns of individual school boards are too easily lost and too easily outweighed by the larger voice of teachers' associations and governmental bodies.

While Mr. Hogle is correct to point out the disparity between small groups of trustees and larger groups of teachers, he also is correct to point out the dangers of going too far in the direction of unified action.

". . . you don't want to see the development of two giants at constant war," warned Mr. Hogle.

The school boards must retain their local characters if they are concerns. At the same time, they must seek a larger, more effective voice in education.

If they can succeed in this delicate tightrope act, their success will bring more balance and a louder local voice to the educational concerns of the province.

Leisure Time At Premium For Women Who Have Jobs

The Brockville Recorder and Times

The holiday season is over and for many people its passing is a relief. It's meant a lot of extra work and expense and a few headaches. For women, especially housewives, it has been a time of an extra-heavy load. The phrase "I never done" this is especially true for women who work both inside and outside their home.

When the time off from their jobs and their households is combined, working women end up with about 70 hours less free time per week than other people whose jobs are not demanding.

This has been documented in countries separated by enormous cultural, economic and political differences by an international undertaking called the Multinational Comparative Time Budget Research Project.

To find out how people spend their time, the project surveyed urban-industrial centres in 12 countries — Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, France, Hungary, Peru, Poland, W.S.A., Italy, West Germany and Yugoslavia. In each country, at least one urban centre with a population of from 40,000 to 200,000 was selected and a representative sample of residents was asked to fill out diaries detailing their activities during a 24-hour period.

In each society, the study revealed, working women are in a double bind. Although they participate extensively in the labor force, they retain the responsibilities at home remain largely defined by their traditional role.

Whereas women are responsible for 32 percent of all time registered in formal work over all the study sites, they contribute 78 percent of the total time taken up by unavoidable or related family obligations.

These discrepancies in work roles also show up noticeably on the weekend, say the directors of the American portion of the project, which was conducted by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social research.

It is then, they say, that employed men "indulge themselves in relatively large amounts of leisure activity. The housewife also shows a universal tendency to employ Sunday as a day of rest . . . her time spent on housework generally falls off almost 50 percent on the day.

"The employed woman, however, just doubles the amount of time spent on housework on her days off from work; clearly she must use them to catch up on these obligations rather than profit from them for rest and recuperation."

The pattern was the same in each of the countries despite dramatic differences in economic structure and income.

The average housewife in Osnabruck, West Germany, for example, has at her disposal an array of modern conveniences and technological "timesavers" that might only be dreamed of in Kragujevac, Yugoslavia. Yet the total amount of time spent on housework varies by an average of only one minute per day between the two cities.

This is because, the researchers suggest, the labor saved through the use of laborsaving devices is quickly absorbed by a household which is more concerned with a higher and higher standard of upkeep is applied.

The woman who must draw water from a well is likely to tolerate a little more dirt than the woman with kitchen is run largely by pushbutton devices.

Even the nonemployed, nonurban homemaker, supported by an army of electrical appliances and convenience products, spends no less time on household work than housewives did in earlier, more primitive times.

What has changed is the nature of the work being done, and the sophisticated technology does appear to do is provide release from the more physically, taxing and tedious labors.

It's Our Turn To Listen to You

Newspapers and clergymen have often been accused of a common fault: that they are good talkers, but poor listeners.

With the weekly appearance of Page Five, The Intelligencer hopes to be able to tune in better to the wave lengths of our readers.

In most newspapers, letters to the editor are the only avenue of comment, appeal or criticism permitted members of the community.

As a result, many articulate spokesmen for a variety of causes never succeed in putting their cases before the public.

Beginning today, each Saturday's Intelligencer will have two editorial pages. The regular page four edition, like that of most daily newspapers, deals primarily with provincial, national and international affairs.

With the addition of a second Saturday editorial page, more space becomes available for comment on local issues by local people.

Regular features will include 'Point-Counterpoint', a head-to-head debate by two people in the community on current topics of interest .This newspaper may not agree with either side of the argument, but recognizes the need for presenting more than one aspect of an issue.

Many citizens whose very livelihoods make them experts of sorts on various topics will be offered a forum for their points of view. Members of the legal, medical, and school communities, for example, will be asked to comment on new developments in their respective fields.

Similarly, those who specialize locally in such fields as the arts or even in athletics may have gripes that need airing or laurels to award.

All this is not to suggest that Page Five is for a select few. Each week, a man-in-the-street poll will give a random sampling of opinions on a topic of local interest.

Intelligencer staff reporters will be editorializing on situations they have run across on their beats, in addition to providing feature stories and photographs that, in themselves, are a commentary on the times.

"Notable Quotes", another regular feature, will be a selection of public remarks that are sometimes erudite and occasionally inane.

We will also follow the time-tested editorial custom of either praising or hazing people in the public eye in a list of "Bravos and Boos."

Many of our community's resources are well-known: industrial, aesthetic, and so on.

But one of our wealths is too often overlooked — that of ideas — and it is that treasure for which Page Five will go prospecting.

Belleville auto dealer John J. Trudeau whose sales organization dates back half a century, recalls wartime gasoline rationing days with son Jamie as they inspect old rationing booklet. Mr. Trudeau admits the wartime rationing on gas was discouraging" for auto dealers and doesn't expect the present oil shortage scare will result in re-imposition of rationing regulations.

Present Oil Shortage Unlikely To Impose Wartime Measures

ROY PEACOCK
Staff Reporter

The threatened shortage of gasoline is not likely to materially affect sales of full-sized cars in Canada.

That is the optimistic view of John J. Trudeau, president of Trudeau Motors Ltd. in Belleville, now more than half a century in the auto business.

Production wise, Canada is much better off in oil supplies than the United States and because of this Mr. Trudeau does not expect too much of a problem in this country.

He admits the threatened oil shortage will have some effect on auto sales but still looks for-ward to a strong market for full-sized cars in Canada.

In terms of last year's high sales, the Belleville dealer expects overall sales may be down a bit in 1974 but still all dealers will have a good year.

Small car sales will increase but sales of full-sized models will be hurt only a little. Gasoline prices, however, will go higher.

At the same time however, with operational costs on the increase, Mr. Trudeau feels dealers will have to come up with more efficient management if they hope to retain profit margins and remain in business.

Looking back over his long association in the auto industry, Mr. Trudeau recalls the short supply days of World War II when gasoline, tires and even autos were rationed.

"We had new cars on our lot but couldn't sell them without approval from the wartime prices and trades board. And approval wasn't forthcoming unless the would-be purchaser could prove that he needed the new car for his business.

Car owners were issued with gas rationing booklets allowing only so many units per year. People in business were issued additional gas rations — but again only if need was proven.

But Mr. Trudeau recalls there were a lot of black market coupons floating around.

"If a motorist found he didn't require all his coupons he could sell them to somebody else."

With rubber supplies funnelled into war equipment production tires were hard to come by and patched and "boozed" tires were common.

As result people didn't drive any more than was really necessary.

And even when cars were again, in production following the war, customers were offered by would-be purchasers for high placement on dealers' sales lists.

"I had as much as $2,000 offered over the going retail price," the veteran auto dealer said. "But I wouldn't stick my neck out.

Wartime rationing was a very discouraging" situation for the auto industry, he admits.

Looking ahead Mr. Trudeau doesn't anticipate such problems in the future. This despite the present-day scare about short gasoline supplies.

And he feels that the anti-pollution problem with gas powered autos is being solved.

He noted that General Motors have come up with a new type catalytic converter for 1975 cars which promises to give up to 13 per cent better gas mileage over 1974 models.

Because of the expected improved mileage Mr. Trudeau feels the future of the full-sized cars is "pretty bright."

Last year was a proud year personally for the president of Belleville - based Trudeau Motors Ltd.

He was the winner of the Time Magazine Quality Dealer Award for Ontario - the highest form of recognition given to any franchised new-car dealer in Canada.

Mr. Trudeau was one of only 13 new car dealers in the nation to win the award which Is presented for outstanding performance as an automobile dealer and valued community citizenship.

Mr. Trudeau is the firm president, Jamie son John is vice-president and while another son Jamie is vice-president and company treasurer. A daughter Mrs. A. (Doris) Bunton is company secretary.

Beating Energy Crisis Also Better for Slacks

By PETER GOODSPEED
Staff Reporter

You've probably seen families just like them on your own street.

Father is standing at the back of the car gruning as the January slush oozes over his boot tops. He pants pushes and pulls at the rear fender while mom plunges the accelerator to the floor. The tires whine as they spin across the ice buried beneath the newly fallen snow.

PETER GOODSPEED

The children, meanwhile, are watching the whole episode from their perch in the back seat. Their breath is forming cute clouds of ice in the rear window and their boots are leaving water stains on the upholstery.

Suddenly the car lurches forward as the fast balding sedan's rear tyres finally bite through to the pavement and dad is left star ng at his freshly laundered slacks, now splattered with salty brown snow.

"There must be an easier way to do your Saturday shopping," he mutters to himself between less printable expletives.

There is, but your neighbors never really thought much about it. Like most people in North America, they are victims of a personal energy crisis.

They would rather drive the family car five or six blocks to the corner store than walk or take the bus there.

Talk of a fuel shortage has spawned a lot of half-witted and half-hearted suggestions for saving energy and changing consumption habits in Canada and the United States. Newspaper readers, television viewers, even radio listeners have been bombarded with messages telling them to turn down their thermostats, to drive more slowly or to wash their clothes in cold water.

In Belleville, the transit commission runs 15 dull orange and dirty white colored buses along five bus routes throughout the city. Last year they carried approximately 1,207,000 passengers and travelled a total of 415,600 miles.

According to the transit commission's general manager, last year's statistics are indicative of an over-all passenger increase of about three per cent yearly.

Perhaps the most interesting statistic to come out of the transit commission's report is how, ever, is the one that shows that only 2.83 passengers ride the buses for each mile of route travel. In short, taxpayers are paying approximately $334,700 a year to support a transportation service that is running neck to neck with the family car in popularity.

One can't help but question the wisdom of people who are willing to subject themselves to the problems and expenses that attend car ownership when they have a bus system that will take them wherever they want to go in the city for as little as 25 cents a trip.

Even if there wasn't all the talk there is of an energy crisis, Belleville should take a longer look at the problem of getting people to ride the buses.

There doesn't appear to be any sane reason for having so many automobiles cluttering our streets and highways when a public transit service can perform the same general functions of the family car more economically and efficiently.

If the city were to try and encourage bus use by selling monthly transit passes, having special weekend, family bus fare rates or, following Toronto's lead, create car-free zones within the city, then, perhaps, the neighbors down the street would find they don't have to worry about taking the car to the corner store in the middle of a January blizzard.

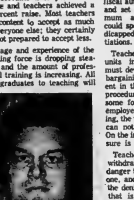
Today's Big School Units Require Right to Strike

By RON POSTE
School Te^cher

We live in a time of change.

All the world talks about change, yet it is the only thing that has brought progress. It is the teaching profession, Mr. Chips is dead, and Miss Dove too is a figment of a past era. The teaching profession has changed, and so must the image of the teacher.



For the first time in Ontario's history, teachers, under intense provocation by the Ontario government, have closed most of the schools to demonstrated their unwillingness to submit to harsh, arbitrary and after the fact legislation. Very few teachers are proud of this intention-al breach of contract, but it certainly bears out the adage that education makes people easy to lead but difficult to drive, easy to govern but impossible to enslave.

Consider for a moment, the chain of events that has led up to probably the most visible indicator of a growing teacher militancy, the strong demand for the right-to strike. Increasingly evident in Canada is the desire of those people and groups directly affected by decisions of governmental bodies, or all levels to be involved in, or at least informed of decision making that will affect their living" and working conditions.

This desire seems to be an outgrowth of a general societal unrest sweeping this continent. Students, minority groups, occupational groups, in the private and public sectors, age and sex factions and many other members of the general public all seem caught up in a general state of restlessness with their lot. And increasingly different organizations are not immune.

The best security against revolution is in constant correction of abuses and the introduction of needed improvement. It is the neglect of timely repair that makes revolution necessary. It is the shared opinion of many teachers that the proper image in the eyes of the public needs rebuilding. The Mister Chips image is long gone. The modern teachers morale is at a low, and under this state of affairs there is only one way to go.

We had everything to lose and little and little to lose. Consider the conditions that led to the rise of strong unions. In my opinion, conditions in the teaching profession now parallel this law, and the rise of a strong union of teachers, or collective bargaining conditions for student and teacher is eminent. Teachers have come through bad times, and none of us is willing to submit to a "return to the fifties".

RON POSTE

The causal factors of militancy frequently mentioned have salaries as the top issue. Teachers have witnessed a steady decline in salaries compared to the advances of other workers.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that over the last three years, industrial workers averaged a 21 percent increase, civil servants a 15 percent increase and teachers achieved a 12 percent raise. Most teachers are content to accept as much as everyone else; they certainly are not prepared to accept less.

The age and experience of the teaching force is dropping steadily, and the amount of professional training is increasing. All 1974 graduates to teaching will hold a university degree. The proportion of males in teaching is steadily increasing. Dissatisfaction with working conditions is on the rise. Teachers are becoming increasingly frustrated by the ever increasingly difficult workload accompanied by a decreasing sense of accomplishment.

Increased specialization is producing a system increasingly reluctant to submit to the conventional authority of laymen. Teachers consider themselves professionals rather than skilled employees. Teachers have long been expected to perform professional functions without holding professional authority.

The schools have never lacked for critics. It has always occurred to me that everyone who emerges from high school, with or without a diploma, automatically becomes an educational expert. They can be only one other profession that the amateur is automatically accepted as out-ranking the professional — that profession of course is football coaching. The Monday morning quarterback always knows how the strategic plays should have been made.

The teachers of Ontario are unique in that they have no formal requirement in law to require school boards to bargain with them. However, during the past, with the exception of certain crises, a system drawn up by teachers and trustees worked quite well. However, in 1969, the government decided to limit the fiscal autonomy of school boards and set a ceiling on the maximum amount school boards could spend. This severely handicapped teacher - trustee negotiations.

Teachers, because of larger units involving more people, must develop a set of collective bargaining procedures. Inherent in the collective bargaining procedure is the ability to exert some form of pressure on the employer. In collective bargaining, the use of economic sanction can not reasonably be denied. On the industrial scene this pressure is maximized through the strike.

Teachers do not agree that the withdraw of services will endanger the life and limb of anyone, and hence, can not accept the denial of the right to strike that is legislated for police, firemen, hospital workers, armed forces, etc. We see ourselves as essential as the railway workers, or the postal workers, and believe that a teacher strike, while an inconvenience to many, will not endanger anyone.

Teachers consider themselves to be a profession because they have the three ingredients that Carrothers believes are required of a profession: they have a body of abstract knowledge; the group is organized into a self-disciplining body concerned with the establishment and maintenance of high standards of ethics in their relations with and lastly, they provide service. Teachers do not consider themselves as members of a union.

Until a viable alternative to the strike sanction is developed, until a collective bargaining procedure will allow a fair and equitable settlement of salary and working conditions is presented to us, we demand the same benefits of the collective process that is available to all other employee groups in similar non-essential services - the right to strike.

We may never use it - we hope to never use it - but we must have the ultimate pressure to bring to bear on our employers - the right to totally withdraw services when conditions are so intolerable that the work with no pay is better than continued employment under existing conditions. Teachers desire, teachers deserve, the right to strike.

Teachers Professional . . . At 'Sitting on the Fence!

By RICHARD PAYNE
Intelligencer Wire Editor

Hah!

My heart bleeds for the teachers.

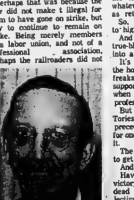
Seems to me a youngster's basic human right to learning is violated when he slugs his guts out making a team and then finds the coach has been playing favorites or the parents of a teacher and no teacher is willing to fill the coach's job, because his own union professional association is working to rule.



Professional- hah! They are right about that - a professional job of nose-sitting is what the teachers have done. They have wanted all the social prestige of considered teaching to be a profession, and all the freedom from self-discipline which the irresponsible enjoy when their work is a job. They want the freedom associated with setting their own work standards, and the security accruing from being employees of the state, which means the financial security which results from being members of a strong union, but without being contributing members of the working class.

And then, when their employer, the province merely tightens up on the reins a bit, they start screaming about basic human rights.

We didn't hear them screaming about the striking railroaders were ordered back on the job. As far as we know, the teachers of this province then thought the government action was necessary to restore an essential service.

But the railroaders had a right to strike when they walked out. And they were right to do so when the government told them to do so. We certainly didn't hear much about basic human rights and retroactive laws.

Perhaps that was because the law did not make it illegal for them to have gone on strike, but only to continue to remain on strike. Being merely members of a labor union, and not of a professional association, perhaps the railroaders did not realize that the denial of the right to continue what they had once been able to do legally became the law a retroactive one.

But it didn't take - the teachers long to recognize retroactivity when they were bitten by it. The Ontario Government proposed to make it illegal for teachers who had submitted their resignations by the end of November to act on these resignations in January.

There was nothing in the proposed law to make the November resignations illegal, but there was a threat to teachers in December that they couldn't stay away from school to do so. By just shows the value of true professional standards when we realize that the teachers had no difficulty whatever in recognizing this law as retroactive.

So, naturally, they screamed to high heaven.

It's one thing to stand up to the howls of these human rights freaks when they are merely supporting a strike, but when they are backing a professional association . . .

But after all, don't blame the Tories. They were in an impossible position . . . right for once. So, of course, they blew it.

The only people who are going to get hurt are the taxpayers.

And, of course, the kids.

Having won this professional victory, the teachers will take dead aim at their next objective - the right to say what should be taught in schools.

War, we know, is too important a business to be left to generals, but education, apparently, should be left to the educationists . . . a weasel word that, if we are not careful, will ever and everywhere.

Up to now, education has been, in the main, the domain of businessmen. It has been this that young people were educated to fill jobs.

And even some of them think Mao and the Chinese people, should shut up.

Teachers will agree.

Single Parents Form Canadian Association

By ISABEL HUGGAN

A sad-eyed woman sits stiffly in the middle of the couch, hands held rigid in her lap. There is a fixed smile on her face. When she speaks, her voice is slightly tremulous.

This is all so new to me," she says, "I really don't know how to act yet."

Luckily she is in a room with seven people who know just how she's feeling, for they've gone through the same stage themselves.

She is newly separated from her husband adjusting to being single for the first time in 15 years.

The other people are members of the Belleville One Parent Families Association, holding an Amigo Night at the home of the club president.

"Amigo" means "friend", and this evening is set aside for prospective members to meet older ones and learn about the organizations.

Selma McComb, president, has been a member since shortly after the club began in January, 1968. A widow for eight years, she has become one of the most active workers in the group.

"Our membership was 15 to start with," she recalls. "Now it's over 70. We cover an area with a 35 mile radius.

"Our initial activities were for children, so that single parents could entertain their families. Now we focus on the needs of both adults and children."

Membership is presently open to parents who are single by reason of divorce, separation, death or because they never married. Custody of children is not a factor.

Associate membership to childless widowed and divorced people may soon be available in Belleville.

Until this month, the One Parent Families Association in Belleville was called Parents Without Partner Inc., part of an international organization.

Becoming discontent with their ineffectual role in the American-dominated organization, 14 of the 45 Canadian chapters broke free to form a new national association.

"Now we are entirely Canadian," Selma says. "We have our head office in Toronto, our own magazine, and our own convention - - in Kingston this year - - at which we can be responsible for provincial and federal grants to assist with projects such as summer camping.

The yearly membership fee is $10. National headquarters receives $5, as does the local branch.

The Belleville group exists without a municipal grant but finds the community very helpful in other ways.

The Recreation Centre runs off the monthly newsletter without charge. Meetings are held for free in church halls and public school executive meets in a trust company board office. Operating costs are kept to an absolute minimum this way.

During any month, the Belleville OPFA holds between 10 and 17 events. These include discussion groups, general meetings, Amigo nights, dances, teen parties and children's nights.

General meetings, held every two weeks - - once in Belleville and once in Trenton each month - - often feature speakers on topics of special interest to single parents.

This past week they heard a representative of the Big Brother association.

Lawyers speak about the legal aspects of divorce and widowhood. Ministers talk about morality and facing problems. If difficulties. Psychologists and children's Aid workers answer questions about raising children alone.

Several professional people are associated with the group as assist members with problems. Surprisingly, the response from ministers in the area has been quite weak.

However, local clergymen are doing private counselling on a large scale. The rising divorce rate (375 petitions for divorce were filed in Belleville last year, 74 more than in 1972 has increased the number of people seeking guidance and comfort from the church, both before and after marriage break-ups.

Counselling is a necessity for people left alone to care for children, as well as for those deprived of their families except on weekends.

A listening ear is often just as useful as advice. And how welcome are the words, "I know just what you mean!"

Member of the OPFA are familiar with loneliness, the adjustments of widowhood, the financial burdens of alimony, the struggles to exist on mother's allowance, and with the bitter term of custody and settlement. They know all about emotionally draining months and years spent trying to face life alone, after having had a partner.

During Amigo nights and discussion groups, members get a chance to air their private anxieties and to share their experiences.

Often, the conversation turns to the social problems of adjusting to single life again.

"However, our group is not a mating-and-dating club," Selma says.

In fact, members' views tend to be conservative and cautious about falling in love and possible remarriage.

"Sure, I like to go to the dances," said one divorced man at Amigo night. "And I often take out women from the association. But I didn't go to get dates. I joined for my children's sake."

A widow said, "I enjoy the evenings just as much when I sit and talk to other women as I do when I'm dancing."

Sharing the burdens of single parenthood, the members strengthen themselves and each other. They help fellow members move, and look for work. They provide transportation for families without cars, and exchange services and good babysitters.

The group operates much like a family, and motherless children find they now have contact with many women.

The OPFA holds a Thanksgiving dinner and a Christmas party. In the summer, there are picnics and boat rides for the children and their parents.

Through membership, parents make friends that last even when active participation in the group may cease. Many people drift away from the club when the first critical years are over. Some remarry, some move away.

Others stay involved in the association for a variety of reasons, but none more typical than Selma.

"The biggest reward for me is seeing sad people smile again," she says.

Successful Living
Testimony For Abstinence

By DORIS CLARK

Like so many married adult Canadians, my husband and I were moderate social drinkers, but into our social activities there crept a sense of uneasiness. Matters came to a climax seven years ago, when we broke away from this life.

As our social activities lost their special appeal, we found ourselves spending more and more time in youth work.

Gradually it dawned on us that on the one hand we were helping to build up young Canadians, while on the other hand we were part of a tearing down system. We couldn't continue to close our eyes to the fact that social drinking is a destructive influence in the life of our youth.

But what a temptation it is for the social drinker to rationalize away his responsibilities! After all, we were moderate drinkers! Surely that couldn't hurt anyone. Perhaps we should teach our young people to drink in their own homes like ladies and gentlemen?

But as we thought through these questions more carefully we knew that we just couldn't justify our social drinking.

Moderation? The moderates are the backbone of a system and of an industry, which brings untold misery to thousands of men, women and helpless children.

Teach our young people to drink moderately? What if our child becomes the one out of every ten social drinkers who is destined to be an alcoholic?

Well, in the end, like the proverbial ostrich, we decided to stick out our neck. How else does the testolae make progress?

Here, I should say, that our United Church strongly influenced us. We don't equate Christianity with total abstinence, but we do believe the latter is one of our great causes today.

The double standard was the final straw that broke the camel's back. On certain evenings when our more Church-minded friends called, we entertained them with cocktails, but when our more Church-minded friends called, the liquor cabinet was kept locked. However, we did have several close brushes, such as the time when the minister called unexpectedly during the cocktail hour. Only quick leg work cleared the scene in time.

Finally we decided to give up cocktails once and for all.

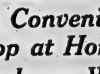
At first it wasn't easy; we had come to depend on the (so-called) cheering cup more than we cared to admit. But after a few months things eased; the pattern was broken.

We found, too, that when one door closes another opens.

First we slew our own particular dragon and were able to plunge headlong into youth work without any uneasy pangs on the alcohol question.

But we have reaped the greatest reward within our own family, where we feel that the principle of total abstinence is paying off.

Psychologists tell us that the teen-ager has two main drives: One, to be accepted by his peers: Two, he wants his age and maturity recognized. How better can a youth show his manhood than by imitating the adult pattern? If the adult pattern is social drinking, then the teen-age pattern will be the same.



But young people don't need artificial stimulation to have a good time! During the Christmas holidays last year the young people of our house planned a party which, in all came, ranging in age from 17 to 34 years of age.

Rugs were rolled back, the music struck up! Bless me, if they didn't have an orchestra of their own! After Dad and I exchanged greetings with the guests, we turned in to bed, but not out of earshot: The very house seemed to shake with music, tapping and laughter. Then new vibrations assailed our ears - a hearty singsong had broken out.

After a while we heard the clink of glasses. But thank goodness there wasn't a hard drink in the house. All the gaiety and good fun were the natural outcome of youthful high spirits. For the record, the refreshments were: sandwiches, cake and coke.

Total abstinence pays off! Helen and J. G. Macdonald, in The United Church Observer, March 1968.

SUMMER CAMPS FOR THE DISABLED

. . . "I will be thinking and talking about those splendid, happy camp days for a long time." The warm and sincere words of one camper praising the March of Dimes, Ability Fund's first annual summer camp for the disabled. Th ir pilot project, which in the planning stages seemed only a dream, was one of this year's major successes.

The Ability Fund made summer a whole new experience for 126 disabled adults. The aim of the four live-in camps was to provide a recreational and fun holiday with a free and easy atmosphere. In an unstructured program of activities such as swimming, arts and crafts, and archery, the campers made new friends, shared experiences and grew in social stature and self confidence.

Living at the camps were a bit more organized but no one was made to feel he had to participate. However, everyone went to pub nights, few people missed out on the wheelchair dances. Mixing ages and disabilities made each camp special with a relaxed atmosphere you could feel.

Arriving at on camp, you would have found a bunch of empty wheelch airs on the path, and sprawled over the grassy banks of the lake, a group of young people, one playing a guitar, another singing. It would have been impossible at first glance to guess which are the handicapped and which are the vo. unteers. This was what the camps were striving for and achieving it was main y due to a great team of volunteers.

The summer camps were a tremendous success. Much was learned and there were many snags, but a need was satisfied, a need that has been neglected and will only grow in the future.

The Ability Fund has placed the expansion of the camping experience i n high priority for the coming year. But a camp can not run on hope and good will alone. It takes hard work and sufficient funds. In January's March of Dimes, Ability Fund campaign give generously when the volunteer calls. Make summer camps another big step towards giving the disabled the opportunity to realize their fullest potential vocationally, recreationally and socially.

What Day Is It? Ask Your Poodle

Dear Ann Landers: I laughed when I read the letter about Kelly's dog who wouldn't eat meat on Friday. The bewildered writer wanted to know if it was possible that the dog knew what day of the week it was. You said: "Dogs don't know whether it's Friday." Are you sure, Ann?

A cook we once had left every Friday evening and returned Tuesday morning. Our little toy poodle, Lucky, used to sit at the kitchen door, sometimes for as long as an hour, waiting for the cook to arrive. She never slept by the door any other day of the week.

One morning I said to Joe: "How in the world does Lucky know it's Tuesday?" He answered, "It's easy. She looks at the morning paper."—La Block, Chicago

Dear La: Thanks for more evidence to wake my case. You can't even move unless of myself.

You didn't say, but I do hope Lucky was reading the Trib. Himself. (P.S.: Happy 50th wedding anniversary to you and Joe.)

Dear Ann Landers: I am 1... and have never had a boy-friend. It doesn't bother me much because I have other interests — music, sports, girl-friends and volunteer work. I'm not saying I'd turn a guy down a date if he asked, but I'm not in agony over my dateless-ness. The real problem is mother.

She keeps saying things like: "You'll be going to college next fall. If you can't find a boy-friend there you are hopeless." Also, she nags me continually about my weight. Last night while thumbing through a fashion magazine she said: "You could never wear these dresses with that rubber tire around your middle, and those elephant hips."

I'm so sick of her insults I'd move out of the house in a minute if I had a place to go. Every day she gives me a lecture on how to be sexy around boys. The more she talks the more I hate myself and her, too. Last night I sat in my room and cried for an hour after one of her "instructional sessions." Please, Ann, tell me what to do.

My mother is making me sick mind and body.—Miss Impossible

Dear Friend: Both you and your mother need counseling. But she won't get it. That's why this advice is for you. Most school guidance counsellors are good. Some are excellent, others just fair. If you haven't considered this route, please do. You could find the answers to many pressing problems right under your nose. And good luck, honey.

Dear Ann: You need to do better research. In a recent column you said: "For every lonesome guy in this world there are two lonesome girls."

Not true. If you eliminate the widowed (mostly older) and divorcees (who wants them?) and look only at the single women who have never married, you will find there are about three million more men than women who have never entered into the blessed state of matrimony. These figures came from a 1973 almanac.—W.F.B.

Dear W.F.B.: I won't quibble about your head count but I do want to comment on your off-hand observation: "Divorcees—who wants them?"

Apparently just the men who are looking for wives. A divorcee between 22 and 40 has twice as good a chance of getting married as the "unclaimed jewel" in the same age bracket.

Appointments For Women Unimpressive

TORONTO (CP) — Ursula Franklin, a University of Toronto physicist, urged the federal advisory council on the status of women Tuesday to push for the appointment of women to national and international posts.

Dr. Franklin said Karl Levitt, a professor at McGill University in Montreal, is qualified for appointment to an inquiry conducted by the United Nations in all countries but she has not been asked. Dr. Franklin called the situation a "glaring omission."

Council chairman, Dr. Katie Cooke, speaking to members of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, (NAC) a private group composed of women's organizations in Canada, said her council has been working for two months to get a list of the women appointed to posts in the government.

She said the Liberal government has said that since 1968 that 280 women have been appointed to various posts. However, she added, considering there are 2,000 such government posts, that's not a great number.

Laura Sabia, new chairman of the Ontario advisory committee on the status of women, said she can no longer continue as chairman of NAC and announced she will step down.

The national advisory council ends its fourth session of closed meetings today. Dr. Cooke spoke to the NAC before the meeting Tuesday.

'Honeybear' the Cop Traps Speeding Trucks

EVERETT, Pa. (AP) — Winifred J. Boose is the latest Pennsylvania State Police weapon in a war of nerves against speeding truckers.

She wears a shawl over her uniform jacket and has a stuffed toy gorilla in the rear window ledge of her unmarked car.

She is part of an enforcement campaign that began in November. Police are using women troopers, unmarked cars, concealed radar and citizen band radios to enforce the 55-mile-an-hour speed limit.

She took after a rig heading west on the Pennsylvania Turnpike which had passed her blue sedan. She clocked the driver at 70 m.p.h. on her speedometer for the required .4 of a mile.

She then accelerated to 85 m.p.h., removed her shawl and put on her police hat. She caught the truck and booked the driver off the road.

The angry trucker claimed he was trying to deliver his load of lobster before a trucking shutdown began at midnight. He got a $15 citation.

The short-wave radio in her car began to crackle with the voices of truckers talking about the arrest.

"We've got a female Smokey (trooper) out there," said one driver. "She's already slopped one 18-wheeler. She'll be right back out there.

"She's at milepost 158," said another.

"That's Honey Bear (the truckers' code name for Trooper Boose). She got me last week."

"There's nothing honey about that bear."

Trooper Boose joined the convoy truckers began a shutdown protest. "You got that female version: "You got that female Smokey."

"Hey, Momma Bear, why are they're the mouse. They keep you picking on the truckers?" he said a trucker. "We're just going along nice."

Trooper Boose: "85-to-70 isn't legal."

Then she explained her job. "I'm more of cat and mouse. We're the cat and mouse. We're the cat and they're the mouse. They keep talks on us. We keep talks on them."

The truckers' citizen band network has enabled drivers to spot policemen and radio their locations to comrades on the open road.

Viceregal Post Goes to Woman

TOONTO (CP) — When the rumor went out this week that the federal government would appoint a woman as Ontario's new lieutenant-governor, Pauline McGibbon began to speculate along with the rest of the people about who it would be.

"Friend said to me, 'How about you, Pauline?' but I said I didn't have a chance in the world," said the 53-year-old chancellor of the University of Toronto, appointed Thursday as Ontario's first woman lieutenant-governor.

"I didn't know who it would be until Mr. Trudeau called me (Tuesday) last," Mrs. McGibbon said in an interview Thursday.

"Actually, I wondered whether it (the hint of a woman's appointment) was just a kite being flown. The government could say it tried to find a suitable woman but it couldn't and then appoint a man."

Mrs. McGibbon, born in Sarnia, Ont., will succeed W. ees Macdonald, 81, Ontario's present Lieutenant-governor, in a ceremony in March.

Mrs. McGibbon said she has "worked hard and enjoyed every minute" of her chancellorship at the University of Toronto a position she has held since 1971, but she added she does not know whether she will have to give it up when she takes the vice-regal post.

She said she "definitely" hesitated when she received the telephone call from Prime Minister Trudeau Wednesday night.

"If you're a married woman, you must sit down and discuss it with your husband—there must be co-operation," said the wife of Donald McGibbon, treasurer of Imperial Oil Ltd. They have no children.

"We were both hesitant. You ask yourself, will you give up five years of your life for public service and how much remains for yourself."

Mrs. McGibbon described herself as a believer in many causes of the women's liberation movement but she does not approve of all the methods used—"I guess it's my generation."

"I never have felt discrimination personally but I am very willing to accept the fact that women have really felt discrimination.

"We can't move heaven and earth overnight but at least we're starting," she said with a smile and added that her new post is part of that beginning. "Every first helps to create a second. However it does put one under a strain to be first."

The first woman chancellor at the University of Toronto, first woman president of the university's alumni association and first woman member of the 75-year-old Canadian Club, Mrs. McGibbon admits she has had training at being the first—"but it always frightens me."

She also is the first woman in Canadian history to be appointed lieutenant-governor of a province.

Mrs. McGibbon's post as chancellor is unpaid but as lieutenant-governor she will receive a salary of $55,000 and have a suite at Queen's Park.

Mrs. McGibbon has been deeply involved in community affairs as well as education and the theatre, and she has received many honors.

In 1967, she was awarded the medal of service of the Order of Canada, the Centennial Medal and the Civic Award of Merit from the City of Toronto.

Women's News Briefs

SYRACUSE, Sicily (AP) — A mother decided to have her four-month-old baby baptized without consulting the estranged husband and caused a riot in the church. On the day of the baptism, her husband and some friends charged into the church and a brawl ensued, police reported. Two persons were injured and five arrested. In the end, the baptism was called off.

Women Teach

TORONTO (CP) — During 1969-70, the average length of experience of women secondary school teachers in Canada was seven years, compared with seven years and two months for men, reports Labor Canada. However, women elementary school teachers had an average of seven years and five months experience over that period.

Our Prayers Must Be In Harmony With God

By REV. DR. GORDON C. SMYTH

George W. Cornell, Associated Press religious writer, reports from New York a general comeback for prayer. Theresa Gilbert Rauburgh of the Globe and Mail has written in a similar vein:

The one-sided dedication to social action on the part of churchmen, during the last decade, produced a gradual spiritual starvation. The reaction is not frivolous. It goes to the core of our being.

Dr. Paul Tournier, renowned scientist and devout Christian, wrote: "Prayer is the most powerful form of energy that one can generate. Its results can be measured in terms of increasing physical buoyancy, greater intellectual vigor, moral stamina, and a deeper understanding of the realities. This being so, we would be advised to learn from the most powerful figure this planet has ever known. Prayer was as the air that Jesus breathed. So much so that one of the apostles spoke for them all when he exclaimed, "Lord, teach us to pray." There was a real difference here. He had something they wanted to share.

Notice, in the 11th chapter of Luke's Gospel, that Jesus did not talk about technique, psychology or posture. He did not say much about prayer. He talked instead about the character of God. The Master's concern was that we have a correct idea of God as "Father". Quote so. What we think of God shapes our prayers. This is the first big thing in prayer.

The next big thing is to remember (John 16:23) the truth behind the custom of ending our prayers by saying "in Jesus' name". "For Christ's sake, Amen." What we say should be consistent with our Lord's mind and example.

It is a good thing prayer does not operate like a slot machine into which players feed coins until they go broke or hit the jackpot. The lumberman in the picture now and a city dweller be disappointed if he did not get "Bucks" weather. Aunt Maggie might be prayed to death for her house but Grandma might be prayed alive so long as she continued to be a thorn in Hitler.

Oil might flow generously from the Middle East but what about the Jews and Arabs?

To pray in Jesus' name means asking for those things in harmony with his will. We can pray for the healing of the sick because we know that he was a healer. We can pray that former friends may become reconciled because he went to great lengths to settle disputes among apostles.

Moreover, we can pray for the poor because Jesus fed the multitude. We can pray for unity among Christians because that was a major theme in the Upper Room, before he was betrayed.

We can pray for the coming of the Kingdom of God because that was dearest to his heart.

We can pray for our own improvement because he challenged us with the perfection of God.

We can pray, above all, for strength to bear our own particular cross because that is how he taught us to follow him.

The most profound experience of the human race is that there are re-creating forces, not within our power to create but within our power to absorb. We need not be played out or spent. We can pray to a waiting heavenly Father. Our prayers will be answered, if they breathe the spirit of Jesus Christ, God's Son.

Bible Written Record Of Tent and City Lore

This third instalment of a five-part series on the Bible deals with its origins.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

In their goatskin tents at night, families recounted their ancestral lore. At watering places along caravan trails, men recalled the places of generations past. Inside city gates, elders retold the story of a people's encounter with God.

It was an extraordinary tale, the collective memory of an ancient people. Preserved orally at first, it was the beginning of the Bible.

"It didn't spring into being ready-made," observes Bible scholar William Barclay. "It is the product of centuries."

Eventually a start was made in recording those traditions in writing. Scripture attributes the first books to Moses around 1300 B.C.

The process continued for about 12 centuries, the final passages put down in the aftermath of Jesus, the "New Man" of Christmas.

For a time, His followers also perpetuated the experiences of Him only verbally, but gradually, in time, put their recollections into writing, a task that went on for about 50 years.

Over-all, the actual writing of the Bible, including the older Jewish Scriptures and the New Testament of Christianity, lasted from about 1300 BC until near 100 AD.

Putting it into writing was arduous labor. The earliest lettering was traced in ink of gummed soot on sheepskin parchment. Rolls of it, stitched together, formed the ancient scrolls.

Later, use was made of papyrus, a primitive paper formed of bulrush reeds. The sheets, about 10-by-8 inches, were sewn into long strips with wooden rollers fastened at each end. This permitted a scroll to be unrolled from one end as it was being read and, at the same time, to be rolled on the stick at the other end.

Reproduction of the scrolls was by hand-copying. Few people could afford to own the painstakingly produced rolled books, often encased in ivory, silver or gold.

Not until the third century of the present era was a book formed of folded sheets bound at the edges, called a codex. The oldest of these now extant date from about 200 to 450 AD.

For a long time, they were the oldest existing copies of the Bible, but recent finds at the Dead Sea have brought to large quantities of the older scrolls.

Jewish tradition assigns the first five books of the Bible to Moses. However, scholars now conclude that various writers had a hand in these early books and that parts were combined and edited in following centuries.

The oldest parts of Genesis and Exodus are ascribed to "J" since the author refers to God as Jehova, an interpolation of the Hebrew letters, YWHA, and uses simple, often anthropomorphic descriptions.

Other parts are attributed to "E" since he refers to God as Elohim, the generic Hebrew term for divinity, and shows more advanced theological concepts. Then interspersed layers of different composition sometimes give two successive accounts of the same event.

A third writer of Leviticus is termed "P" because he shows a particular concern for priestly duties and rituals and because of greater precision in style. A fourth is called "D" for material distinctive to the book of Deuteronomy.

A copy of that old book was found hidden in the Temple at Jerusalem in 621 BC in the reign of King Josiah. Read to the people, it spurred sweeping social reforms.

About 90 BC, the prophets became active, beginning with the great champions of social justice, the moral doom and the aristocratic, defiant Isaiah. The books bearing the names of the prophets are largely collections of their sermons by their disciples.

An amatuerish or scribe named Baruch recorded the discourses of Jeremiah, a vehement, modestly inspired crusader for peace in the years 626 to 580 BC.

During the half-century of Jewish exile in Babylon from 587 to 538 BC and in the following centuries, the accumulated writings were consolidated, including the Psalms and Proverbs, and additional works were composed, such as Jonah, Esther and Daniel.

Followers of Jesus began setting down the narratives of His life, the gospels, and the letters beginning about 50 AD, 20 years after His final days.

Mark, believed composed from accounts given by the apostle Peter, is the oldest gospel. Matthew and Luke apparently borrowed from it and also from a common, lost source known as the Q document. John is a largely independent, more interpretative account.

The Book of Acts was recorded by Luke, a companion in Paul's travels. The epistles or letters are mostly by Paul but some are by other disciples.

While the Old Testament originally was recorded in Hebrew or a related Semitic tongue, Aramaic, the language of Jesus, the New Testament was written in Koine, the street Greek of the masses.

Besides books now in the Bible, a variety of other Jewish and Christian literature existed. Some was revered for its authenticity, but other writings were considered of dubious origin.

In 70 AD the Jewish Council of Jania designated the canon of Jewish books held authoritative. The verdict essentially already had been rendered by the Jewish community itself through its devotional usages.

Roman Catholic Old Testaments include seven books not in the Jewish canon, while Protestant Bibles do not. Modern common Bibles include them in a special category.

By the first three centuries after Jesus, many unevaluated Christian writings also circulated. Early bishops and teachers undertook to specify which were considered credible and which were doubtful.

These early church "fathers," Ignatius of Antioch, Irenaus of Lyons, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian and Cyprian of Carthage and Origen of Caesarea, all agreed on the authenticity of the four gospels but differed about some other books.

In 367 AD, Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, issued a list of books that became the norm. The council of Carthage in 397 AD ratified the 27 books which have since made up the New Testament.

By these methods, the Scriptural canon, meaning a measuring up, was established. A basic criterion was that the books must have originated with apostles or their associates.

Copies of many of the non-authoritative books exist today. Some of this writing, called "apocryphal" or spurious, includes highly fanciful passages, mixed with seemingly valid material.

In fixing the canon, the church had determined the makeup of the Bible. Yet, in another sense, the Bible had preceded and determined the makeup of the church.

In it is a good thing prayer does not operate like a slot machine into which players feed coins until they go broke or hit the jackpot. The lumberman in the picture now and a city dweller be disappointed if he did not get "Bucks" weather. Aunt Maggie might be prayed to death for her house but Grandma might be prayed alive so long as she continued to be a thorn in Hitler.

Oil might flow generously from the Middle East but what about the Jews and Arabs?

To pray in Jesus' name means asking for those things in harmony with his will. We can pray for the healing of the sick because we know that he was a healer. We can pray that former friends may become reconciled because he went to great lengths to settle disputes among apostles.

Moreover, we can pray for the poor because Jesus fed the multitude. We can pray for unity among Christians because that was a major theme in the Upper Room, before he was betrayed.

Service Unites Clergy

An Anglican bishop and a distinguished Roman Catholic choir joined an ecumenical service dedicated to furthering church unity in Belleville Friday night.

In the mid-1950s he was rector of St. Thomas Church in the city and is known to many long-time Belleville residents.

Bishop Robinson delivered the homily at the service opening the World Week of Prayer for Church Unity in the city. About 500 members of various churches and congregations attended.

Music was led by the boys' choir from St. Michael's choir school in Toronto, one of the province's noted church music ensembles.

Other clergy participating in the event were Msgr. J. P. Sullivan, St. Michael's church pastor; Rev. Donald Himmelman, Holy Trinity Lutheran church and president, Belleville Ministerial Association, and Rev. J. Leslie Dean, Tabernacle United Church.

Familiar Surroundings

Bishop William Robinson of Ottawa (left) was in familiar community surroundings when he came to Belleville Friday night for an ecumenical service. The bishop, with Msgr. J. P. Sullivan, pastor, St. Michael's church were the service was held, was rector of the city's St. Thomas Church 20 years ago.

Belleville Men Not Keen on Fitness

Everyone talks about it, but just what is being done about physical fitness in Canada and in Belleville?

With the Commonwealth Games slated to start in New Zealand next month and the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal rushing at us, Canadians have begun to take stock of their athletic abilities and ambitions.

The federal government has adopted Canada's cultural emphasis-sport and has begun to bombard Canadians began to bombard Canadians with messages that tell them they are fat, flabby and foolish.

—Television viewers are being intimidated by watching an old man jog around their television screens while a voice tells them that a 90-year-old Canadian is as fit as the average 60-year-old Swede. And fitness studies, such as the one recently conducted by the federally funded Participation group in Saskatoon, continually report results that are shocking.

The Saskatoon tests, for example, revealed that 40 per cent of the males tested fell into the low to fair category when put through a series of exercises designed to test the working capacity of the heart and lungs.

In an attempt to assess the current interest being shown by the residents of Belleville in their standard 'of health, The Intelligencer talked with Cliff Belch, deputy director of the city's recreation and arena department and Brian Bentley, fitness director at the YMCA. We asked them to outline the types of activities and programs open to the resident who wanted to get back into shape.

The answers were revealing. While there are numerous organized and unstructured programs open to the fitness conious adult, only the women seem willing to become to tally involved in them.

"You don't have to sell physical fitness to the women at all," Brian Bentley said.

"The ladies are really keen about getting into shape, whereas the men aren't really all that interested anymore. It's a complete reversal of the situation we had a few years ago. The Y used to be packed with men. Now, they are just not that interested in physical fitness."

At the Y the athletic department offers series of activities ranging from aerobics, a form of exercise routine done in the swimming pool, to judo and calisthenics. The women's programs boast impressive waiting lists, while the men's programs are being conducted for a smaller, more select clientele.

The Y's men's activities include a series of calisthenic exercise groups - - run every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 7 a.m. noon and 7 p.m. - - a jogging program, a judo club, instructional and recreational swimming and paddle ball. The women's programs are run along similar lines with the calisthenic exercise groups meeting every Tuesday and Thursday at 9:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. In addition to the other activities, the women also participate in aquabics and a figure skate, which is a combination of exercises is administered on an individual basis to help the ladies with their figure problems.

Both the men's and the ladies' groups have their regular members who keep coming back for more and more exercise. The women, for instance, have two or three regulars who swim 50 lengths of the Y's 60 foot pool every day, while the men have one member who swims 95 lengths daily and several joggers who have logged between 75 and 100 miles running since last October. One of the former jogging club members just finished running his 2,500th mile at the Y in Stamford.

Mr. Bentley says that he can't really understand the reasons for the increased popularity of fitness programs among the women, but he does see the men becoming more involved in physical activity in the future.

"With the Olympics coming up and with all the emphasis being placed on participating in sports by the government, people are bound to take a greater interest in physical." he said. "The fitness fad is a recurrent thing that occasionally hits a slump and then comes on strong again."

"I think you'll find that there will always be two age groups that wander in and out of fitness programs. The teenagers - - - those between the ages of 15 and 18 or 19 - - are always drop out programs but they usually come back in when they are in their early or mid 20s and then they stay with it until they are about 31. Those people who are 35 and up have a tendency to let their activity slide, but they do come back every now and then for a workout."

Cliff Belch, of the recreation and arena department, outlined a similar situation. However, he did stress the fact that his department was more concerned with providing the facilities for leisure activity than with presenting the people of Belleville with structured fitness programs.

"What we try to do in municipal recreation is to satisfy the leisure needs of the community," he said. "we make a sotting available and you can avail yourself of it or not. Interest has to come from within the community. We don't go out and organize a program and then try to sell it to people. We are primarily a resource department. If people come to us who are interested in starting a specific program, we try to help them out to get it going. Tell me what you want to do and I can tell you who to see and where to go."

Mr. Belch went on to say that the activities of his department were designed to complement the programs already being offered by other organizations in the city.

"One thing we don't do is we will not program an activity when someone else is offering it in the community. The Y, for example, has all sorts of physical fitness activities and programs such as calisthenics, running and that sort of thing - - so we don't get involved in that, type of program. Where they do not have the capacity for an activity, such as winter tennis, outdoor skating or roller skating, that we will try to set up a program. But again we restrict ourselves to providing the facilities. We don't sell the program. You tell us what you need and we will do some research on it and if we feel we can afford it, and the community will sponsor it, then we'll go for a workout."

The informal leisure activities sponsored by the recreation department include a large range of sports and pastimes.

For three years now, the women of Belleville have shown an interest in yoga and the recreation department has a program, complete with a waiting list, for them.

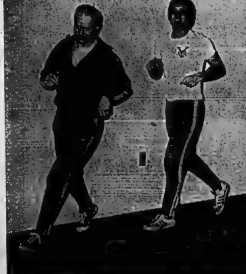
Roller skating buffs have a program set up at the Bay Shoreline Auditorium, while women who are interested in basketball and volleyball have a program set up for Monday and Thursday night at Quinte Secondary School.

The city has an extensive skating program with 21 outdoor rinks scattered throughout the city and a series of men's hockey leagues as Belleville's two arenas.

The broomball fan has a league operating out of the Dick Ellis arena. Tennis fan has similar program in full swing at the Ben Bleecker Auditorium and a ladies tennis program operates on week days.

Even the city's senior citizens have a strong carpet bowling program operating out of the senior citizens centre on Pinnacle Street.

"I maintain that there is an activity, if you want to take part in something," Mr. Belch said "What ever your interest is, there is something going on in the area that will satisfy it."



Elzivir Council

ACTINOLITE—Elzivir and Grimesthorpe council at a public council have set tye following fee. schedule for building permits:

First ..... $1.000 - - $5; each additional $1.000 - - $1.

Livestock evaluators, fence viewers, pound keepers and township property caretaker were re-appointed.

Increases approved by council: Road survey - tendon. 50 cents board; road overseer, 35 cents; road clerk, $100 a year; tax collector, $85.

Noon Hour Rush

The noon hour rush has a different meaning for the men who participate in the YMCA's lunch hour fitness program. Three days a week the men get together for a workout in the Y's gymnasium. It usually ends with a short, fast jog around the room before heading to the showers. Here, Jay Rouse, a five-year man at the Y, and Ted Marshall, a new member of the lunch hour crowd, sprint for the showers with the Y's fitness director Brian Bentley, (centre).

Nurses' Dispute

Wages Go To Arbitration

The wage issue involving Belleville General Hospital's nurses will now be settled by arbitration, after initial scrutiny by, a provincial government conciliation officer Friday.

Representatives of both the BGN administration and nurses' association discussed the issue much of the day at the closed conciliation session at the Four Seasons Hotel.

The conciliation meeting was an attempt to bring agreement on the core wage issue, after meetings between both sides late last year failed to produce any agreement.

But both nurses and administration were sad they were too far apart on the issue for conciliation to be effective, said Mrs. Frances Lefebvre, nurses' association president.

Conciliation officer N. Condy indicated the only step was arbitration, she said.

Provincial government restrictions on hospital budget increases is among root causes of the disagreement between both sides.

For 1974, the government has said it will allow BGH only a five per cent increase — believed the smallest of any hospital in the province.

Mrs. Lefebvre said the hospital administration is negotiating on the basis of the allowable budget increase. But a five per cent rise in wages is "considerably unacceptable" to the association's 280 nurses.

BGH nurses earn $545 a month she said, and have been seeking "a breakthrough" in salary schedules more realistically linked to current living standard demands.

Arbitration is a slow process, Mrs. Lefebvre said it down.

Lewars Heads Parade

For the third consecutive year, John Lewars has been elected chairman of the Quinte Santa Claus Parade Committee. He was re-joined by familiar faces for the preparation for St. Nick's arrival in 1974.

Don Kelker and Annette Marlok were elected first and second vice-chairman respectively during the committee's annual meeting this week.

Peter Rickson retains the secretary and Frank Foley remains as treasurer. The only new member of the executive is Mrs. Marlok.

Although the parade was entertained regarding a December 7 parade day, most committee members felt it was too late in the year for the annual event. For years it has been held on the first Saturday of December.

Bands and marchers would experience some problems with the end weather if the parade were held late, said the newly re-elected chairman.

This year's parade is set for Saturday, December 20. The tag days will be held Friday and Saturday, Nov. 15-16.

Cold But Careful

The weather turns their faces th e same color as their parkas, but Belleville's school crossing guards are h appy with the job they do. Every day nearly 7,000 grade school children trop ughout the city are ushered across busy intersections by 41 guards. Gord Cross field, the guard at the corner of Victoria Ave. and Goldsale Rd., has nearly 40 children from Sir Winston Churchill Public School under his care. He loves his job and says that he does it because he likes children and wanted something to do when he retired from his job in Kingston last year.

Guards Protect Children

By PETER GOODSPEED
Staff Reporter

They are all over 30, but the youngest fitness still trust them.

In fact, Belleville's 7,000 grade school children entrust their lives daily to the judgement of the 41 orange-coat school crossing guards who usher them across the city's busy intersections.

At a time when most people over age are preparing to settle down to endure their retirement years, the majority of Belleville's school crotsing guards have volunteered to spend 12¼ hours a week standing in all kinds of weather at intersections scattered throughout the city.

If you talk to them — the children do it all the time — you will soon learn that the school guards aren't attracted to the job by the $344-week salary. They are motivated by a desire to perform a public service, to see that the children get to school safely and a simple wish to be active during their retirement.

Doug Wright, the city's personnel manager in charge of hiring school crossing guards, explained that he believed the guards were a special type of person.

"We've always had problems encouraging people to accept the full time job," he said. "We never have enough people who want to take it. But, the guards we do have are dependable, conscientious and good with children."

Just about anyone is qualified to be a school crossing guard, as long as he or she fills the three criteria set out by Mr. Wright and is able to make his own way to the corners they are assigned to.

Belleville's traffic safety officer, Sgt. Bob Hall, is the man who trains he guards and assigns them to their posts. At the beginning of every September he conducts a lecture class for the new guards and outlines the duties and responsibilities they will have on the job. During the year, he tours the city to see that they are doing their job properly and aren't having any problems.

"We have a really good group of guards," he said. "The majority of them are retired or semi-retired persons who want to have something to do or need the money that goes with the job to supplement their pension. All of them really like children though and quite a few of them become so attached to the youngsters they work with that they don't want to change corners with anyone else."

The school guards have no legal authority to regulate the movement of traffic, but, in some cases, they are responsible for as many as 800 children who cross the street on their way to and from school. So, the next time you are stopped by a solid, orange-clad guard don't be impatient or disturbed. Just remember, if he weren't there with his sign, it might have been a child who stepped your car — for the last time.

Trustees' Role In Question

By Lenay Williamson

Are school trustees becoming obsolete?

At least one has gone on record as saying so, and he's not happy about it.

Eric Cotton, past chairman of the Peterborough board burst into print last week with a statement that the provincial government is eroding the position and authority of school trustees.

He cites the proposal for binding arbitration, to settle salary disputes and the government's ceilings on spending as two negating the decision-making role of trustees.

Maybe, but we think trustees will be around for a few years.

They are simply too useful to the governments.

They are the people in the middle who take the flak when the government makes an unpopular decision.

Two school closures here since the formation of the county board in 1969 illustrate the point.

Government policy closed both the Tweed high school and Queen Alexandra in Belleville, but it was the local board that was forced to take the blame.

The department had wanted to close the Tweed school for years. It had been consolidating small high schools across the province and Tweed was one of the last holdouts. Not until county boards were formed did local political pressure for retention of small schools relax.

Quinte Met was another case. The province wants to phase out all its old schools, those 50 years old or older. Again, the local trustees took the barrage of bitterness that resulted.

Trustees are alarmed, however by the growing tendency to form citizens' councils to run school-related activities. A government report on community use of schools advocates a citizens' council to help run them.

No trustee is opposed to citizen involvement in education but just how accountable are such councils? They may advise, or will they take the responsibility for use of buildings and finding? If the latter, they will usurp the role of trustees. Trustees hold public funds in trust for the people and are accountable every two years at election time. If their responsibilities are eroded ratepayers will be the losers.

Lumber Operation To Be Expanded

Operations of the former Onion Lumber Company at Bird's Creek in North Hastings are to be expanded by the new owners.

This was indicated Wednesday at a council meeting of Hastings MPP Clarke T. Rollins, who said that Dunstar, the new owners, following its organization, will expand and utilize more waste lumber materials from the area.

The expansion will see more workers hired and will mean more employment for the area.

At the same time Mr. Rollins told council that he had learned that the special area in North Hastings and Renfrew counties designated by the federal government for incentives to manufacturing plants has been extended for six months to June 1974.

Mr. Rollins said he was very pleased" with the extension for which he said he had been working for some time.

"This will provide a further time period for new manufacturing industries planning to locate in North Hastings to qualify for government assistance," the Hastings MPP said.

Seals Performance on the Road Doesn't Help Playoff Hopes

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Clive Callaway's a new boss, home games and the Golden Seals might be in contention for the National Hockey League playoffs.

The Seals, eighth and last in the West Division with 21 points, have a respectable eight wins, seven defeats and six ties on the home games in Oakland.

But their performance on the road is something else and Atlanta Flames didn't help matters Friday night with a 6-3 victory, handing the Seals their 18th consecutive defeat away from home.

Even coach Bernie Geoffrion of the Flames might have had something to do with Oakland's problems.

He gave his club—on a three-game losing streak before the game—a mental blast but before the first period and the Flames came out flying.

In the other game, the new-look Pittsburgh Penguins whipped Vancouver Canucks 6-3 for their 12th victory in 43 games.

Boston 5 Detroit 2

"No, I'm not going to blast the team before every game," said Geoffrion. "I thought it would do some good and it did.

"The team played well tonight . . . It's the first time we smiled in five games.

The Seals, with a 1-31 record on losing ice, can be considered a cinch—unless they develop rapidly—to break the club record for most losses on the road. New York Islanders did the trick in their first season in 1972-73, taking 35 decisions while winning two and tying two.

The Seals were only win on road came Nov. 18 when they blanked Buffalo Sabres 2-0, and the Flames in when Wally McKechnie scored the first of his two goals at 6:35 of the first period.

However, Atlanta got that back at 7:42 and scored four straight goals in the second period on the way to the club's 19th win of the season.

Phillie Gilles Meloche faced 48 shots, including 16 in the first period and 18 in the third, while Phil Myre of Atlanta made 19 saves.

John Stewart scored twice for the Flames, his 11th and 12th goals this season—he had 17 in 1972-73. Bob Leiter, who also had two assists, Jerry Romanchych, Jacques Richard and Curt Bennett shared the other Atlanta goals.

McKechnie's first goal came with man-mate Terry Murray in the penalty box. The Seals now have scored 174 times on handed goals this season, while giving up 10 with the man disadvantage.

"We gambled a little more and it took some chances from the blueline. I think the coach's little talk did some good."

Penguins 6 Canucks 3

Defencemen Steve Durbano and RonStackhouse — acquired in separate trades earlier this week, each scored a goal for the seventh-place Penguins, now with 29 points in the West Division.

The Penguins—14 points behind the fourth-place Flames and the last playoff berth—had lost 11 after the first period and 5-1 at the end of the second.

Pittsburgh received Durbano, Ab DeMarco and Rob Kelly from St. Louis Blues for Bryan Lavender, Greg Polis and an optional second-round draft pick. They got Stackhouse from Detroit Red Wings for goalie Jim Rutherford and Jean Pronovost. Wayne Bianchin, Lowell MacDonald and Bernie Lukowich scored the other Pittsburgh goals. Orland Kurtenbach and Bobby Schmautz replied for Vancouver.

New ork Rangers play in Chicago against the Black Hawks in a game this afternoon. Tonight's schedule has Boston at Montreal, Toronto at Minnesota Buffalo at New York Islanders, Detroit in St. Louis, and Los Angeles at Philadelphia.

Front Office Trouble Plagues Canucks Play

VANCOUVER (CP) — Front-office squabbling continues to take the play away from the players as Vancouver Canucks officials air more dirty linen in public.

"I can't work with that man. . . . He asked me for my resignation, but I said I have no intention of resigning. You only resign when you know you've done a bad job.

"I have no intention of leaving the organization. I'm sure I can work with Phil (coach Phil Maloney) who will coach this week from Bill Mcmurtry) and the owners, but not with Mr. Laycoe. I tried it for seven months; now I've thrown him the ball."

Laycoe was fired by Poole as Canucks' coach in 1971 when Poole was general manager. He later replaced Poole as general manager when illness forced Poole to step down. He refused comment on the latest altercation.

Acting club president Coley Hall, who runs the organization from his winter home in Hawaii while American owner Tom Scallen is barred from the board pending appeal of a four-year prison sentence for theft of $3 million, said via telephone Friday night:

Hall at first said he might have to fire Poole, although he immediately said he was not sticking up for Laycoe.

"I know there's a big head on there," he said.

Later, he said he had been filled in on some backgrounds of the incidents and stated, "Maybe that gives Bud a little cause to say what he did."

It all began last Sunday when Hall called Laycoe and told him to fire McCreary as coach and bring in Maloney from the Canucks' Seattle farm team.

Hull, Harrison Come Through

Jets, Oilers Look to Big Guns

By JOHN SHORT
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Winnipeg Jets and Edmonton Oilers looked to their big men for leadership Friday night in their battle for second place in the Western Division of the World Hockey Association and both clubs got what they wanted.

The Jets were paced by Bobby Hull and Fran Huck in a 7-3 triumph over Cleveland Crusaders while Jim Harrison helped lead the Oilers to a 7-4 victory over Quebec Knights.

As a result, the clubs remained tied, four points behind the idle Houston Aeros and five points ahead of the fourth-place Minnesota Fighting Saints.

Hull scored two goals and one assist for the Jets while Huck produced a goal and three assists. The third member of the Jets' top line, Ron Snell, also had a goal and three assists, giving the combination 11 points for the night.

Harrison collected a goal and three assists, matching the performances of defencemen Bob Wall, to lead the Oilers. Harrison also moved past Danny Lawson of Vancouver Blazers into second place in scoring.

In the only other WHA game Friday night, Los Angeles Sharks moved into a tie with the Blazers for fifth place in the Western Division by bouncing Toronto Toros 4-3.

Mill Black, Chris Bordeleau and Joe Zanussi completed Win-Wal's scoring before 8,968 fans. Grant Erickson, Gary Jarrett and Skip Krake replied for the Crusaders, who visit Edmonton Sunday night.

Wall and Harrison sparked Edmonton to a first-period 3-1 lead that helped rookie goalie Gary Doyle settle down for his WHA debut. Called from Winston-Salem of the Southern Hockey League when veteran Jack Norris was sent home for a few days of rest, Doyle blocked 34 shots, including 17 in the second period.

He was steady most of the way, but admitted after the game that he appreciated the cushion provided by Edmonton's big early lead.

Edmonton scored twice — on goals by Wall and Val Fonteyne — during a minor penalty to Oiler Bob Falkenberg early in the first period. Oiler Edmonton marksmen were Bo Cimbe, Brian McKenzie, Len Lunde and ualty Patenaude. It was believed the two shots-on-goal total during one penalty was a WHA record.

All seven goals were scored against Gary Kurt, who played the first two periods for New Jersey cellar-dwellers in the Eastern Division. Joe Junkin replied for the Knights.

At Los Angeles, former Montreal Canadien star Marc Tardif scored two goals to lead Los Angeles to victory. Steve Bothwell and Ron Ward also scored for the Sharks.

The markers gave Tardif eight goals and three assists in his last four games. He now has 24 goals this season after jumping from the National Hockey League club last year.

Vancouver and Los Angeles each have a chance tonight to continue their drive toward fourth place and be last playoff spot in the Western Division. The Blazers play at home against New Jersey while Los Angeles travels to Houston. Minnesota meets New England and Quebec visits Chicago in other games.

Dynamos Blow 4-0 Lead

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Usually when a team has a 4-0 lead in the first period of a hockey game, they should be able to hold on to it, right?

Shawinigan Dynamos skated to a four-goal margin over Sorel Black Hawks Friday night in Shawinigan but when the final siren sounded, the Black Hawks, leaders in the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League's East Division had posted a 8-8 win.

The Dynamos-Hawks clash was one of five Friday night. In the others, Quebec Remparts blanked Hull Festivals 8-0, Chicoutimi Saguenéens edged Laval Nationals 4-3, Cornwall Royals nipped Sherbrooke Beavers 5-4 and Montreal Junior defeated Trois-Rivieres Draveurs 7-2.

Fights Halt Game After Two Periods

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

A Southern Ontario Junior Hockey League game between Windsor Spitfires and Michigan Americans at Utica, Mich., was called after the second period Friday night when fights between fans and players caused ice-rink conditions.

What Else Could Go Wrong?

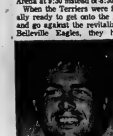
All Bad Dreams for Terriers, Eagles Take Upset 6-5 Win

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Sports Staff

The Orillia Terriers of the OHA Senior A loop must be thinking today that last night was just a bad dream.

Because of inclement weather, the Terriers were an hour late travelling from Orillia to Belleville, forcing the game to start at the Memorial Arena at 8:30 instead of 8:30.

When the Terriers were finally ready to get onto the ice and go against the revitalized Belleville Eagles, they had found that their equipment manager had somehow managed to leave their sweaters in Orillia.



On top of that, part of five of the Terriers equipment, including five sets of shoulder pads and all five pairs of skates were left in their home town.

Four of the players managed to borrow old pairs of skates from Eagles players, while the fifth had to sit out the game.

So, with the entire Orillia team wearing last year's Quinte's sweaters the Terriers took to the ice, only to be sent home on the short end of 6-5 score.

The game, was the first for the Eagles in the past three weeks, but from the way they played throughout much of the contest any spectator at the game would never know it.

Walt Grow, Eagles new coach, said, "I am quite pleased with the way the fellows played. They have had quite a long lay-off, and other than a short lapse in the third, their play was very consistent all the way through."

CHARLIE CONVERY
Heavy Checking

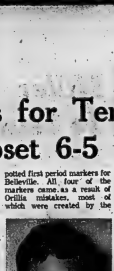
Belleville had a few unfavorable visions of their own before the start of the game.

Two of the regular defencemen, Bob Kirk and Bob Edmunds, both from Oshawa, couldn't make their way down for the start of the game due to hazardous road conditions. So, the Eagles had to go with three defencemen in the line-up and move one of their forwards back to the fourth defensive spot.

Edmunds did manage to make it down for the last period of the game, but Kirk decided not to take any chances. Take 2

As it was, the Eagles accumulated a 6-1 lead at the end of the second despite the fact that they were playing w'ith a limited defensive corps.

What the defence was lacking, goalie Karl Bagnell made up for in excellent netminding.



Bagnell stopped the Terriers cold on innumerable occasions throughout the contest, robbing them of sure goals five or six times.

Belleville had jumped into a decisive 4-1 lead by the end of the first 20 minutes of play.

Between the close of the first goal and the 17:24 mark, the Eagles had three, as they added goals to jump the score to 4-0.

Les Colligan, Wayne McConnell and Dave Riley all potted first period markers for Belleville. All four of the markers came as a result of Orillia mistakes, most of which were created by the Eagles go ahead 6-1 as Greg Marchen and Ray Johnston tallied. Once again the goals were results of Terrier mistakes.

GEORGE GODSON
Three Assists

Belleville went through a slight defensive lapse for the first part of the third period, but pulled up their socks in the second half to battle a strong Orillia bid to tie the game up.

The Terriers potted four goals in the first 13 minutes of the third period, Dave Street, Dave McCullagh, Gerry Marsh and Jim Vaughan all tallied for the visitors to put them within one goal of the Eagles.

Belleville wasn't to be denied victory however, with the Eagles coming out in the second half of the period behind their opposition for the ice surface.

In the last minute of the game, Orillia pulled their goalie in a desperate attempt to tie the score, but between Bagnell in the Belleville net and the goalie clearing by Ralph Plaine and Charlie Convery the Terriers were in vain.

Tonight the Eagles travel to Cambellford for an 8:00 p.m. encounter with the Hornets and Sunday Belleville is in Brantford for a 7:30 game.

pressure of the Eagles' persistent forechecking and positional play.

The second period saw the

Two Ties In Quinte League

The Quinte Hockey League again Thursday night showed its balance, as both the regularly scheduled games ended in a tie for the second time this season.

Dave Horwood and Dave Jones each scored once for the Construction men, with Horwood's coping at 11:05 of the third period.

Jason Morris's second goal of the night at 9:54 of the third period gave other markers with Ron Frasier adding a pair of assists.

Twelve minor penalties were assessed in the roughly played game, two to the losing Belvedere team.

Western Tut Evens Series

By MARK BRETT

The Belleville Juveniles came up with an impressive win in their OMHA Triple A playoff game in Peterborough last night. The visitors outclassed their opponents to the tune of 5-1 behind the standout goaltending of Pete McQuat and some electrifying defensive playing by the Belleville team.

The second period was scoreless with Grant Coogan picking up the only goal of the third period.

Bonspiel for Lefties

Hey, Lefty! Does being a southpaw in a world made for right - handers sometimes make you angry enough to throw rocks? If so, a unique bonspiel planned by the Oakville Curling Club for Saturday, Feb. 9 is tailor-made for you.

On that day club will play host to all the managers believe to be a unique event in curling history - the first spiel for left-handers.

And there's more involved than a little fun. The eight rinks that curl their way to the finals will fight it out for more than bragging rights and prizes as well as the Mono Lino and B.D. Wire trophies for the winning and runner-up rinks respectively.

Invitations have already gone out to all Ontario Curling Association member clubs in the province as well as to provincial curling associations across the country.

Because entries will be limited to 28 rinks, Bonspiel Chairman John Bryant and his committee - - - all of them lefties, of course - - are urging would-be competitors to get their entries in without delay.

Applications should be sent to:

John Bryant,
Oakville Curling Club, P.O. Box 414,
Oakville, Ontario.

The entry fee is $8. per curler or $32. per rink and spicards are invited from individuals as well as complete rinks.

Bryant also asks that the names of all curlers, the places they hold in their rinks, and the address, telephone number and club affiliation of the skip, be sent along with the entry fee.

The committee hopes to expand the event to a two or three-day bonspiel in 1975; one that will attract port-sided curlers of both sexes from across Canada as well as from clubs in other countries.

More details may be obtained from Mr. Bryant at the above address, or by telephoning (416) 844-0862. Because this is a first try at the event, this year's entries will be accepted from men only.

HOCKEY TIPS

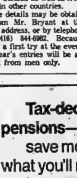
THE BACKHAND SHOT

The player who masters the wrist and the backhand shots should be able to score a lot of goals. Both are tough shots performed with the same movement, except of course, one requires a forehand motion and the other a backhand movement.

The backander is a hard shot to pick up that is why you find very few players good at it. And all you have to do to watch a few goals scored by the backander to realize it is one of the most difficult steps for a goaltender to make.



Let's say I have picked up the puck behind the net of the opposing team and circled to the front of my backhand. When I moved across the front of the net, the goaltender moved with me and therefore, gave me a lot of room. For instance, in moving with me, the goaltender likely opened his legs.

As with the wrist shot, the backander involves cocking the wrists, releasing the wrists and following through with the body, but once again, the bottom hand is the power hand and when I finish the backhand, my bottom hand is on top of the stick.

Over the past four weeks, we have discussed four types of shots all hockey players should try to learn. The best way of developing accuracy in each is to practise them every day.

One suggestion is to score yourself throughout the year. Get a piece of plywood or draw an imaginary net against the wall in your basement or garage.

Give yourself two points every time you pick a corner with a backhander, a wrist shot or a flip shot on 50 or 100 shots. Score one point if you pick a corner with a slap shot. All it takes is ball an hour.

Trainer Takes Over Bulls

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There was a doctor in the house. It didn't do much good. They should have called for a coroner.

Dr. Robert Bell, the trainer for Chicago Bulls, took command as coach of the National Basketball Association team Friday night.

The operation was hardly a success. The patient died.

"It felt good, up until we got beat," the doctor said after Detroit Pistons stomped on his Bulls 113-95, handing Chicago its third straight loss and fifth in the last six games.

In the rest of the NBA, Buffalo Braves beat Capitals,Bullets 106-94,Houston Rockets downed New York Knicks 96-90, Boston Celtics defeated Atlanta Hawks 98-94, Seattle SuperSonics swept past Philadelphia 76ers 116-104 and Los Angeles Lakers edged Kansas City-Omaha Kings 116-115.

American Basketball Association results were Indiana Pacers 118, Virginia Squires 106; New York Nets 112, Memphis Tams 105; Denver Rockets 121, San Diego Conquistadors 93; and Utah Stars 115, Carolina Cougars 102.

Pistons 113 Bulls 95

Dr. Bell found himself as boss after coach Dick Motta was slapped with a $2,000 fine and a three-game suspension for a run-in with officials a few weeks ago in Seattle.

Bob Lanier scored 22 points for the Pistons and Dave Bing had 19. Chet Walker topped the Bulls with 25 points.

Braves 96 Bullets 94

Rookie guard Ernie DiGregorio scored 24 points, including four key throws in the final 30 seconds, to spark Buffalo. Bob McAdoo had 25 points as the Braves recorded their ninth victory in their last 1 games.

Rockets 96 Knicks 90

Celtics 98 Hawks 94

John Havlicek led the Celtics with 26 points, while team-mate Dave Cowens added 22 and Jo Jo White 16. Pete Maravich had 27 points for the Hawks.

SuperSonics 116 76ers 104

Dick Snyder scored nine of his 23 points in the third quarter to lead the SuperSonics. Spencer Haywood had 25 points for Seattle.

Lakers 116 Kings 115

Jerry West connected on a 25 footer at the buzzer to give the Lakers their win. Gail Goodrich scored 26 points for the Lakers with Nate Archibald getting 21 and Jim Kings.

Miller 'Soars' To Seventy-One

"Well, it's okay. It's still not that bad."

Two things were bothering the silver blonde who has yet to be beaten this season: He went three strokes higher than the brilliant 63 of his opening round Thursday andshe'd taken two-blown bogeys on three of his last four holes.

"It's a shame to finish that way," Miller said. "I didn't hit any really bad shots, but I didn't condition myself to the wind. It just came out of nowhere. I hope my bad rounds are behind me."

His round, however, kept alive his record of having broken par in every competitive round this season and put him in position to make an unprecedented sweep of the first three titles of his season. Arnold Palmer was the last to win three consecutive American tournaments in 1962. No one has ever won the first three in a row.

Miller's 133 total, 11-under-par for two trips over the 7,300-yard Tucson National Golf Club course, gavehim the advantage over Allen Miller, no relation, alone in second.

Allen Miller had a 71—137. Jim Colbert's 67, the besround of the entire day, put him at 138. A group at 139 included rookie Ben Crenshaw with a second-round 69, Jerry Heard at 72, Rod Curi with a 70, and Kermit Zarley at 71.

Lee Trevino headed home to El Paso, Tex., a victim of the cold, after encountering his customary early-season problems, had a second-round 74 and a 147 total, one stroke higher than the cutoff figure for the last two rounds. It was the first time Trevino had missed the cut since the Los Angeles Open more than a year ago.

Ben Kern of London, Ont. finished the day with 71 for a two-round total of 146.

Johnny Miller, winner of the Bing Crosby and last week's Phoenix Open, was working on a four-under-par for the day, 14-under for the tournament and was threatening to make a rout of it until the desert wind kicked up while he was playing his last few holes.

Fengler Out

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indianapolis Star says Harlan Fengler has been ousted as chief steward of the Indianapolis 500-mile auto race and will be succeeded by Tom Binford.

"Although no announcement has been made, Fengler will not return to the job he's held since 1958," the Star says in a front-page story today. Fengler has been under nationwide criticism concerning the starts of the last two Indianapolis races.

July Start Urged For New Airport

TORONTO (CP) — Work should start not later than July, 1975, on the proposed $1.5-billion international airport at Pickering, just northeast of Toronto, says a brief by a Toronto-based federal transport department planning team today.

It says one major runway and a temporary passenger terminal should be opened at Pickering by the end of 1978 to handle charter flights and air freight.

The report submitted to the federal airport inquiry commission says the need for another Toronto-area airport to ease pressure on the one at Malton has not diminished despite the world fuel shortage.

Extensive studies have shown that Pickering is the "most convenient" site for a second major Toronto-area airport and also the "closest practical location." the 184-page report says.

The airport inquiry commission headed by Mr. Justice Hugh Gibson of the Federal Court of Canada, was set up by Ottawa to hear objections to the Pickering airport.

It plans public hearings in February and to make its final recommendation by October.

The transport department planning team report says that a second runway and a main terminal at Pickering should be completed by 1990.

If Pickering facilities do not start operation until 1980, another terminal will be required at Malton to ease overcrowding of facilities, the report says.

It adds that expansion of Malton would cost only $62 million less than the proposed second airport and noise levels for residents surrounding Malton would become intolerable.

Oil Price Problem

Lewis Suggests Pact Incentives

BY THE CANADIAN PRESS

David Lewis says the government should offer oil-producing provinces incentives in exchange for a domestic-oil-price agreement.

The federal New Democratic Party leader, speaking in Toronto Friday as the party's fed-a-eral council opened a three-day meeting, said Prime Minister Trudeau should offer Saskatchewan such incentives as better freight rates for its agricultural prices and industrial development.

Meanwhile, the prime ministers and Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney met in Ottawa Friday for private talks in advance of next week's federal-provincial energy conference.

No statements were issued, but the prime minister's office said the talks were similar to those held Thursday with Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed.

Alberta and Saskatchewan produce more than 95 per cent of all Canadian crude oil and are at loggerheads with Ottawa over the new export tax and pricing policies.

Premier Blakeney said Thursday in Montreal he would try to meet federal officials before the conference to stave off a serious confrontation at the two-day meeting.

Conference officials announced a brief four-point agenda which will allow the energy reserves."

prime minister and the 10 provincial premiers to begin Tuesday morning with general statements summarizing their main working positions.

From there, the conference will move into the broad subject of oil and gas policy followed by a discussion of "other elements of a national energy policy."

Also as a preamble to the conference, Manitoba Premier Ed Schreyer said that his province will support Ottawa's energy policy."

He said Canada's fuel supply must be protected from the ups and downs of the international market, and export-tax returns should be used to ensure further development.

In other developments:

—Neil Stewart, associate vice-chairman of the national energy board, was appointed chairman of the federal energy supplies allocation board which is being established under emergency legislation to distribute fuel supplies in the event of serious shortages.

—Manitoba Liberal party leader Izzy Asper called for an investigation into the profits of Canada's oil companies to determine whether they are profiteering from the energy shortage.

He also asked for a royal commission to "take an inventory of the total national

Oil and Gasoline Prices May Firm

OTTAWA (CP) — The most visible achievement of next week's federal-provincial energy conference may be more stable gasoline and heating oil prices in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

If the federal government has its way, and that seems likely, the conference will approve a petroleum subsidy program to hold down prices in and east of the Ottawa Valley.

Tentative plans for a subsidy scheme were announced by Prime Minister Trudeau and Energy Minister Donald Macdonald last month. They said then that details would have to be arranged by the conference.

The entire region from the Ottawa Valley to Newfoundland depends almost exclusively on overseas oil, the price of which has risen dramatically in the last few months.

The rest of Canada is supplied by domestic oil, the price of which has been frozen at about $4 a barrel since September. The price of overseas oil is roughly triple this figure.

Canada depends largely on Venezuela and the Middle East for imported oil. Both sources nearly doubled prices when the last increase was announced in December.

Previously, rising international prices had opened a gap of eight to nine cents a gallon between East and West.

When the first tanker loads of higher-priced oil are delivered later this month, the gap will widen to about 28 cents a gallon, say federal officials.

Mr. Macdonald says the differential is financeable and some form of subsidy must be adopted. He has indicated it will be about 12 cents a gallon.

If such a subsidy is approved, it will offset pending increases in the prices eastern consumers now pay for heating oil and gasoline.

When the last round of price boosts occurred Dec. 1, premium gasoline in some eastern centres jumped to nearly 80 cents a gallon. Heating oil rose as high as 46 cents or more a gallon.

How long a subsidy would hold prices down would depend on future overseas price increases and conference decisions on long-range domestic pricing plans.

The subsidy scheme is expected to win support from most premiers, particularly those from the five eastern provinces that stand to benefit.

The most controversial aspect may be financing.

Mr. Macdonald has indicated the scheme will be paid by revenue from the export tax on crude oil. Alberta and Saskatchewan, the two main oil-producing provinces, argue they would be paying the shot through a federal levy on their oil.

Spokesmen for the two provinces have called this unfair,

CP News Roundup

Yaremko And Davis Confer

TORONTO (CP) — Premier William Davis met with Solicitor-General John Yaremko Friday to discuss recent stories of the minister's land dealing activities.

"Mr. Yaremko didn't offer his resignation and Mr. Davis didn't ask for it," an aide to the premier reported.

It was revealed this week that in 1968 Mr. Yaremko partitioned some of his land in the Niagara escarpment area a few days before the law was changed to require government approval.

Public Pays

MONTREAL (CP)—Mr. Justice Emmett Hall's arbitration award has "effectively destroyed" railway arguments over who should bear the cost of wage increases, the chief negotiator for Canada's 56,000 nonoperating railway workers said here Friday.

Richard Smith said that Mr. Justice Hall's ruling on this issue reflected the views expressed by the union negotiators during arbitration hearings.

In a section of the award, which provides substantial pay increases for the non-op and 27,000 other railway workers, Mr. Justice Hall said:

"Use of the railways as an instrument of national policy requires that it should be the union as a whole, not the employees of the railways, which must absorb any deficit that may occur in the carrying out of national policy."

Snow Heavy

HUNTSVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Owners of cottages in central Ontario, particularly the Muskoka area, should have their cottage roofs shovelled, a municipal building inspector said here today.

He said in some areas snow has been falling at the rate of six inches a day for the last 10 days.

Compacted snow accumulations on the ground average 24 inches in the Bracebridge area, 18 inches at Parry Sound, 21 inches at Milford and 20 inches at Bancroft, he said.

Heads Board

OTTAWA (CP) — Retired business executive Richard Murray was appointed Friday by Prime Minister Trudeau to head the new Foreign Investment Review Agency and pledged a strong hand against foreign takeovers.

More Houses

The CMHC said the final total represents an 18.615 gain from the previous high of 240,614 set in 1972. The corporation announced earlier in January a 1975 total of 265,000, based on a preliminary count.

Floating Town

MONTREAL (CP) — A spokesman for the organizing committee for the 1976 Summer Games said Friday an independent agent is still negotiating with preliminary plans about forming a "floating village" of 1,000 apartments during the Montreal Olympics.

Michel Labrosse, director of planning for the organizing committee, said cruise ships arranged in the Montreal harbor could help ease an expected shortage of hotel accommodations.

Pay Raised

TORONTO (CP) — The Civil Service Association of Ontario (CSAO) announced Friday an agreement has been reached with the provincial government to give civil servants pay raises of about 16 per cent.

John Ward, a spokesman four the CSAO, said the association has accepted a two-year contract offer for 18,000 government employees—general service workers including clerical and secretarial staff.

Audience Enjoys Duo Recital

By FRANK MARTIN

Despite inclement weather, a substantial audience turned out on Wednesday evening for the second concert in the Community Concert Association series, and the artists, a Chinese husband and wife violin and piano duo, presented a program of chamber music carefully chosen to display their mature; distinguished artistry.

The opening offering, a piano sonata from the Mozart middle period, was given a precise if somewhat restrained reading by Madam Tung at the Steinway. Unfortunately, the string counterpoint, for the most part low register, suffered an almost total loss of identity. One would suspect that the artists were misled by the acoustic properties of the auditorium. Only in the formal statement of the adagio movement was the presence of Mr. Ma's Stradivarius clearly perceived.

In the Chopin Polonaise-Fantasie which followed the Mozart sonata, Madam Tung's talents as a solo performer were displayed. Precise execution and careful dynamic treatment of the keyboard orchestral passages characterized her interpretation of the vivid imagery of Chopin's paean to his motherland.

In the brittle, angular Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 which concluded the first half of the program the instrumental balance improved noticeably. That the artists seemed quite at ease with the Bartok atonality may be due in part at least to their early childhood exposure in China to oriental tone structure.

The second half of the program was devoted entirely to a sonata in D Major by twentieth century Swiss composer, Volkmar Andreae. While not of strikous consequence to the purist, the romantic flavour of this lyric work proved an ideal vehicle for the artistry of Mr. Ma and his Strad. One could not feel the response of the adience to this rich tapestry of sound. That we are all creatures of emotion is all too often forgotten by those who would perpetuate the mystique of purism.

Notable in the encores was the Handel allegro from the A Major Sonata, a fitting finale to a pleasant evening.

The audience, still smarting from the chastisement of the local venerable and sometimes irascible dean of music critics, performed impeccably, we are pleased to relate.

Cultural Events For Olympics

MONTREAL — (CP) — Aspects of Canadian culture ranging from the design of bean pots to the production of grand opera will be shown to the world on television when the Olympic Games are held here in July, 1976, a city official says.

Jean Dupire, co-ordinator of the cultural program, said in an interview that 1976 will be an opportunity to "show the world the variety of the Canadian soul."

The organizing committee for the 1976 Olympics known as COJO (Comite Organisateur des Jeux Olympiques), has earmarked $100,000 to last four years.

That will pay only for one executive and his secretary. More money will have to be raised from private sources and from federal and provincial governments, Mr. Dupire's salary now is paid by the city.

The additional events are scheduled to open July 17 and run for two weeks. But the cultural program is being planned for all of July, 1976.

The cultural events will be concentrated at Place des Arts in downtown Montreal, but also will spread east to Quebec City, north to Ottawa, and west to Kingston, Ont., where the sailing events of the Olympics are to be held.

It is estimated that about one-fifth of radio and TV broadcast time spent on the Olympics will be devoted to culture.

Masterpiece Unveiled

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Institute of Arts formally unveiled Monday its latest and perhaps most precious acquisition—a long lost rare oil painting by the 15th-century Italian old master Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio.

The masterpiece, titled The Conversion of the Magdalene, is the fourth painting by the Baroque-period master in the United States.

It was acquired more than a year ago and donated to the institute by the S. S. Kresge Foundation and Mrs. Edsel Ford, daughter-in-law of the founder of the Ford Motor Co. The purchase price was $1.1 million.

Dr. Frederick Cummings, the museum's director, said the painting is perhaps the most important acquisition by an American museum in a decade.

'Twins' Share Fate

"There is a time to be born, and a time to die," the Bible says.

This is the story of two men, unrelated by blood, who shared a strangely similar destiny.

The story began back in 1966 when I received a letter, dated October 25, from John M. Brown of Gormley, Ontario. That letter is before me now as I write. Let me quote part of it:

"Although I am skeptic about astrology, this letter, strangely enough, has to do with that subject.

"In 1955, at the age of 41, I had the relatively unusual experience of meeting and working in the same office with a man who was born the same day and year I was born, i.e., July 22, 1914. Although we made no comprehensive effort to compare our experiences the following facts emerged.

"1. We were both employed in the accounts department of the Ontario Department of public works.

"2. We both had taken secretarial courses, including shorthand, rare for men.

"3. We both had worked in army orderly rooms during the Second World War.

"4. We both had worked on Patrick Street in Toronto.

"5. We both had worked on Front Street in Toronto.

"6. We both had married girls born in February.

"7. We both had married girls from another province.

"8. We both owned Americans, Motor automobiles.

"9. We both weighed 190 lbs.

"10. Both our surnames started with the letter B.

"I suppose the final evidence will be provided if both our names appear in the death columns the same day. It is unpleasant to dwell upon but gives one cause for conjecture."

The curious sequel to this letter came on September 26, 1972 when I received a note from Mr. Brown's wife. She wrote:

"Another strange parallel between my husband and the other man developed recently. The other man died on September 19, 1971, two months after my husband's death on July 24.

Mrs. Brown enclosed an obituary which said her husband's time on earth had died at age 58. "Suddenly."

She concluded her letter: "By the way, both men were buried from Trull Funeral Home in Toronto, and this was not by design on the part of the widows since we have not been in touch since about 1958.

"And do the strange parallels go on."

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — Bing Crosby is making a "remarkable recovery" from lung surgery last Sunday, his doctors said Thursday.

Crosby's doctor, Dr. Stanley Hanfling, said the entertainer was moved out of the intensive care unit and into a private room.

He's off his fluid diet," the doctors said. "And he's sitting up, reading newspapers and watching television.

"He's very cheerful and we are much more optimistic about his full recovery. He has excellent recuperative powers."

Crosby, 69, went into the hospital New Year's Eve suffering from what was believed to be pleurisy. But his condition worsened, and on Sunday surgeons removed a large abscess and about one-third of his left lung.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — If Governor Milton Shapp's reelection bid fails this November, he'll go back to his music.

The Democratic chief executive of Pennsylvania has written the words and music to two songs, entitled No Shortage of Love, about the energy crisis and The Ballad of Rose Mary, a spoof on Watergate. He spent part of the weekend in a sound studio recording them.

David Stauren, a young Philadelphia composer, was called in to jazz things up and orchestrate the trumpet, drums and electric bass. The singing was done by Sue Levinson, a 23-year-old Spanish teacher.

Shapp, who has already announced his intention to seek re-election, in the Democratic primary this May, said he is negotiating with a couple of independent recording companies, as well as a publisher, concerning release of the songs.

The instrument is a 288-year-old Andrea Guarnerius. Sperung, born in Poland and a Mexican citizen since 1946, gave the violin to President Luis Echeverria for use by the orchestra.

"I donate this violin, which has been part of myself for 35 years, because of the love I feel for my fatherland, Mexico," he said.

Ontario Said Facing Tight Labor Market

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario has a classic case of a tight labor market, says Jim Blain, regional economist for Ontario of the federal manpower department.

"We're experiencing a continuation of the very high level of industrial activity," he said in an interview.

The seasonally - - adjusted unemployment rate in the province in December was 3.3 per cent compared with a national rate of 5.9 per cent of the labor force.

Mr. Blain said manpower offices in Ontario cannot get enough machine operators, tool and die makers, welders, sheet metal workers, skilled construction trademen, workers for service industries, clerk-typists, stenographers or secretaries.

While there may be a slowing in the economy's rate of growth this year, he said, the "fundamental strength is still there" in Ontario.

Derek Gosselin, regional manager for Dot Personnel Services and president of the Canadian Association of Temporary Services, says there is a tremendous shortage of people for available jobs in the province, especially in Toronto.

A. E. Johnson, employee relations manager for Uniroyal Ltd. in Kitchener, says his company is worried about staff shortages.

He wrote to Robert Andras, federal manpower minister, in November "that we are facing serious problems in obtaining and retaining sufficient qualified employees to meet the operating requirements of our various plants."

A Uniroyal recruiting drive in Newfoundland last September produced 110 applicants interviewed at Stephenville and Corner Brook. The company arranged for 37 to have medical examinations and 32 arrived for the examination. Job offers were made to 34 but only 18 reported for work at Kitchener and Elmira, Ont.

A month later, eight were still working for Uniroyal. "The remainder had left of their own accord, in some cases after working less than a week," Mr. Johnson told Mr. Andras.

Tass Man Denies Reporters Spies

OTTAWA (CP) — Ivan Mironov, Ottawa correspondent for the Soviet state news agency Tass, categorically denied Friday that Soviet news correspondents in Ottawa are intelligence officers.

Mr. Mironov made the comment after The Canadian Press reported Jan. 16 that there have been occational rumors about Soviet correspondents doing intelligence work.

"This is not a friendly act," he said of CP's reference to the rumors. "This is not in line with the present state of relations between Canada and the Soviet Union and it does not promote good working conditions for Soviet journalists in Canada."

Mr. Mironov said all factors point to steady progress in Canada-U.S.S.R. relations.

The Canadian Press story quoted an external affairs department official as saying that Konstantin Gusivanov, like Mr. Mironov accredited to the Parliament Press Gallery, has been denied a visa to return to Canada.

The spokesman was quoted as saying Mr. Gusivanov was being denied re-entry "because some of his activities, which in no way could be related to his work as a professional journalist, had been a source of concern to the Canadian authorities."

Separate School Teachers Study Resignations

TORONTO (CP) — Leaders of separate school teachers in several Ontario districts where contracts still are in dispute scheduled a meeting in Toronto today to discuss implementing mass resignations unless settlements are reached by the end of the month.

Doug Knott, negotiator for the Ontario English Catholic Teachers Association (OECTA), said Friday the 3,330 teachers will have no choice but to close schools in the districts Feb. 1 if the seven boards refuse to settle or to accept voluntary arbitration.

A major problem of some of the boards is finding funds to meet demands of the teachers, said Mr. Knott.

"The ministry of education will have to find a way to resolve the financial difficulties of boards in Windsor, Carleton and Sudbury."

Teachers in Windsor voted Thursday night to reject the latest board offer.

Contracts also still are in dispute in Chatham, Essex, Hunoo-Perth and Wellington County.

Teachers in Sudbury and Wellington have asked for voluntary arbitration.

Major issues in all seven districts are teacher requests for an eight-per-cent cost of living increase and an automatic grievance procedure as a condition of employment.

Mr. Knott also said the OECTA executive will meet within a few days to discuss possible action if the legislature is recalled to continue debate on Bill 274 which would extend the effective date of teacher resignations to Aug. 31.

Originally the resignations were to become effective Sun. 1 but they were postponed to Jan. 31 in a compromise with the government. In return for the postponement, the legislature was adjourned in December with Bill 274 still on the order paper.

Munro Outlines Srtike Policy

TORONTO (CP) — Federal Labor Minister John Munro said Friday Parliament should only act to stop a strike "when it is satisfied that an individual right has become a public wrong."

Mr. Munro, here to address the Ontario chapter of the American Foundrymen's Society, said however, it is difficult to determine in advance when or where a strike should be prohibited or ended.

The length of a strike, the extent of the disruption and public interest are all critical factors, he said.

Freezing Rain Ices in Airports

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Airline schedules were cancelled, temporary power blackouts erupted over a wide area and icy roads caused a rash of minor accidents as freezing rain pounded southern Ontario Sunday.

For Complete Details On The Storm's Effects In The Quinte Area, See Story On Page 2

In the Quinte area the ice coated roadways forced cancellation of some of school bus runs throughout Hastings and Prince Edward counties.

Further east, two lanes of Highway 401 were closed for two hours this morning between Napanee and Kingston, as trucks jackknifed across the highway blocking traffic lanes.

Two flights were diverted from the Trenton airport Sunday.

More than 60 flights outbound from Toronto were cancelled as the sleet and snow pelleted two covered runways and forced the airport to close twice during the day.

An Air Canada spokesman said the airport was now moving eastward and "Montreal will be the big problem" today with some morning flights in that area already being cancelled.

The spokesman added that the airline also expects trouble until late afternoon in Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, North Bay and Ottawa.

Another spokesman said all incoming and outbound short-haul flights to Northern Ontario and points such as Montreal, Ottawa and Cleveland were cancelled after 11 a.m. Sunday.

In Montreal, freezing rain also created problems at the international airport and an Air Canada spokesman said six early-morning flights to Toronto had been cancelled as well as three to Ottawa.

The airline was de-icing aircraft planes to keep longer, transcontinental and overseas flights on schedule.

Driving was described as "hazardous" but police, who earlier had warned motorists to stay off the roads, said Sunday night the situation was improving.

The ministry of transportation and communications reported late Sunday light to heavy rain was falling in most areas of southern Ontario and fog was reducing visibility to fair and poor in the Chatham, Niagara Falls, Stratford and Lake Huron areas.

In Northern Ontario, freezing rain was reported in the Nipissing and Sudbury areas and snow mixed with rain near Timiskaming and Sault Ste. Marie. Snow was reported near Timmins and Kapuskasing.

In northwestern Ontario, snowflurries were reported near Thunder Bay.

About 500 families living on farms in the London-Stratford area were left without power Sunday when hydro lines collapsed under heavy ice.

A spokesman for Ontario Hydro said rural areas north of Toronto and some parts of Metropolitan Toronto were also affected by temporary blackouts. One power station in west Toronto was out of service for more than an hour.

Freezing rain in the Muskoka area Sunday night caused several minor traffic accidents and, in some sections, the storm halted traffic.

Provincial police advised motorists not to travel on Highway 17 north of Sault Ste. Marie. On one stretch of the Trans-Canada Highway in that area, 77 cars and transports were either off the road, stalled or unable to move on the slippery highway.

THE WEATHER

Synopsis — A low-pressure centre moving across central Ontario today brought rain in most southwestern localities, freezing rain in central and eastern regions and snow in northern regions. This picture was expected to improve later in the day as the storm centre moves into Quebec, and on Tuesday somewhat colder air moving from the northern regions will bring sunny skies to Northern Ontario and partial clearing elsewhere.

Heath Meets Union Chiefs

LONDON (Reuter) — Prime Minister Edward Heath holds crucial talks with trade union leaders today aimed at ending a coal miners' dispute which has crippled Britain's industry.

Some political observers believe that if Heath and union leaders do not find a formula over the miners' pay demands, which are more than anti-inflation limits set by the Conservative government, the possibility of a general election would increase.

The 270,000 miners have refused to work overtime for the last two months and the reduction of coal supplies to power stations has forced Britain to an energy-saving three-day work week.

Leaders of the Trades Union Congress (TUC), which represents 10 million workers, have proposed that if the miners were allowed to break the pay code other unions would not use it as a precedent in their demands.

But the government and the TUC were unable to reach agreement last week and their resumed talks are seen as a last chance to resolve the dispute.

There was optimism that the talks will succeed, with David Basnick, a member of the TUC team, saying: "The projects must be better than the last time we met."

Idaho Cowboys Ride Motorboats

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Idaho cowboys riding motorboats instead of horses roped stranded cattle and towed them out of flooded areas as most of the northwestern United States returned to normal today after a week of flooding.

A Red Cross spokesman in North Idaho said cowboys were towing strays out of swamped areas with motorboats and occasionally gave the cattle artificial respiration.

No new major flooding was reported in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana or Northern California, but the National Weather Service predicted rain-showers for the region today.

A helicopter pilot became the 17th reported flood-related fatality when his helicopter crashed Sunday. The pilot was flying supplies to persons stranded by floods in south-central Washington.

Searchers in Oregon recovered the bodies of the fifth of nine men killed Wednesday night in a huge mudslide near Canyonville.

The bodies of the other four men are still buried under the tons of mud and debris that cascaded down a hill, sweeping away a small building where the men were working. The hill is a frequent landscape-switching equipment.

Flood damages in the five states has been estimated at more than $100 million, and thousands of persons have been left homeless. Eleven persons died in Oregon, four in Northern California and two in Washington.

Slide Into Monday

Fred Haller of the Belleville Parking Authority had a real blue Monday today when he tried to climb the East Hill on Bridge Street. Mr. Haller has to rewind parking meters throughout the city every Monday. Today he found the inch-thick coating of ice on the street's sidewalk almost impossible to overcome. However, some help from the railing in front of the Armory saw him through the ordeal.

JAKARTA (AP) — More than 1,000 students demonstrated at two Indonesian universities today to protest the arrest of student leaders during anti-Japanese rioting in Jakarta last week.

Big Trade Deficit

LONDON (AP) — Britain suffered a loss of $726 million in its trade with the rest of the world in December, the government announced today. It was the second-highest trade deficit for any month in British history, surpassed only by the trade loss of $789.8 million in October.

Women Walk Out

ALLISTON, Ont. (CP) — Norman Cafik, Liberal member of Parliament for the riding of Ontario, talked to Ontario New Democrat about women's rights Saturday night but failed to impress two of his colleagues. Margaret Campbell, member of the Ontario legislature for Victoria riding of St. George, and Gwen Robb, former campaign manager for Donald Deacon in the provincial leadership race, walked out on him. Both said they objected to Mr. Cafik referring to Liberals only as men.

Oil Situation Improves

OTTAWA (CP) — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says the oil supply situation and the prospect for future supplies looks much better than it did several months ago, because of a mild winter in Eastern Canada.

Oil Firm Executives Accused of Cheating

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oil company executives were accused today of "cheating the American public."

Gold Is $158 As Franc Floats

PARIS (CP) — The newly-floating French franc dipped in value by about five per cent today and sent the price of gold sky-rocketing to $158 an ounce here.

The atmosphere of uncertainty resulting from France's weekend decision to float the franc sent dealers scurrying for cover in gold, monetary experts said.

The price of the 12.5-kilo gold bar soared in an all-time high of the equivalent of $158 an ounce—up from $130 Friday.

On the London market, the price of gold leapt by a record $11.75 to a record $147.25 an ounce. Bullion dealers here also blamed the floating franc, saying it sharpened the growing lack of confidence in paper currencies.

Today's Chuckle

By the time we get old enough not to care what anyone says about us, nobody says anything.

The charge was made by Senator Abraham Ribicoff (Dem. Conn.) as the Senate permanent investigations committee began hearings on the severity of the United States energy crisis.

Exxon "has not fabricated or contrived to hoard about the current tight energy supply situation," Bare said. "The petroleum companies have made major efforts to prevent the shortages from occurring."

Ribicoff accused the companies of creating the "fright and panic" started by reports of severe fuel shortages "to squeeze out the small independent dealers" and of using the sharp increases in the price of foreign oil to push up the price of domestic oil.

Ribicoff called for a price freeze on petroleum products until the severity of the shortage can be determined. Ribicoff also said it is time to cut off tax benefits which he said the oil companies are using to "deprive the American treasury of approximately $3 billion a year."

Ribicoff said the oil firms have misled federal energy chief William Simon as to the severity of the shortages.

Watergate Hearings May End

WASHINGTON (AP) — A business-oriented committee has called for more open government and three leading politicians for a quick decision on whether to impeach President Nixon.

These developments opened a week in which the Senate Watergate committee is expected to decide whether it will hold further public hearings on the Watergate scandal. The committee's alternative was to write its final report and disband.

Chairman Sam Ervin (Dem. N.C.) has said the hearings will resume Jan. 29, but the majority of the seven-member committee is reported undecided whether to continue.

Chief counsel Samuel Dash has said that significant new information his staff has uncovered on campaign contributions justifies a new round of hearings.

Calling for a quick decision on the impeachment question were Senators Jacob Javits (Rep. N.Y.) and George McGovern (Dem. S.D.) and Gov. Ronald Reagan of California. Each commented on a different television interview program Sunday.

Peron Declares War On Marxist Terrorists

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — President Juan Peron has declared all-out war on terrorism after Marxist guerrillas raided a major army camp and killed the commander, his wife and a sentry.

The army said today the apparent aim of the Saturday night attack was to seize arms and ammunition.

A communique said the "terrorists seized a small ranch close to the camp and used it as a headquarters, and that their objective was revealed in documents left behind.

Peron said in a radio-television broadcast Sunday night that the attack was part of a deliberate plan to impede reconstruction.

He called for a general mobilization of the people to assist the government in putting down "terrorism and kidnapping," which have increased since he took office Oct. 12.

Officials said that between 50 and 70 members of the Marxist People's Revolutionary Army (ERP) raided the garrison at Azul, 200 miles south of Buenos Aires, Saturday night and held it until daybreak.

Most of the 2,000-man garrison was asleep when the raiders, dressed in army uniforms, captured a sentry post. They killed a private on sentry duty there and quickly took control of key positions on the base, including the house of the base commander, Col. Camilo Arturo Gay.

The guerrillas took one officer, Lt. Col. Jorge Roberto Ibarzabal, with them as a hostage when they broke through police roadblocks that had been thrown up outside the base. Two of the attackers were believed killed, and an unknown number were wounded, authorities said. The raiders carried their casualties away.

The 70,000-man Revolutionary Army is the country's largest and best-organized guerrilla group.

China Victorious In Fight for Isles

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese government conceded military victory to China today in their dispute over the Paracel Islands and called for an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council to plead its case.

The Chinese foreign ministry in a statement said "due punishment" was meted out to Vietnamese forces sent to invade the Paracels which, the statement said, "have always been China's territory."

"The personnel of the other side whom we have captured in the fight for self-defence will be repatriated at an appropriate time," the statement said. It did not say how many were captured.

The Saigon military command said a Chinese amphibious force of about 500 men seized the last of the disputed coral islands in the South China Sea Sunday, overrunning 150 South Vietnamese troops after a two-day air, sea and ground battle.

"It seems the battle is finished. For the time being, we are no longer taking any action to defend the islands," Saigon's chief military spokesman, Lt.-Col. Le Trung Hien, said. Hien said that eight Chinese and South Vietnamese navy ships were sunk or damaged in the battle and more than 225 South Vietnamese soldiers and sailors are missing.

He said one Vietnamese patrol craft was sunk by radio-guided missiles and the fate of the 82 crew members is not known. One destroyer, one escort and another patrol craft suffered light to moderate damage and returned to Da Nang Sunday, he reported.

Hien said 11 South Vietnamese were known killed, 35 were wounded and the 150 troops who were overrun are missing.

Two Chinese patrol craft, each with a crew of 50 to 60 men, were sunk and two others were heavily damaged, Hien said.

Official South Vietnamese sources said today the Saigon government twice asked the U.S. 7th Fleet to intervene in the battle but was turned down. But the informants said U.S. planes flew reconnaissance missions over the islands today at the request of the South Vietnamese government.

Kissinger Returns to Washington

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Henry Kissinger returned to Washington early today from a 15,500-mile trip that produced a disengagement agreement between Israel and Egypt as well as "real progress" in advancing a similar pact between Israel and Syria.

"The most important thing is that it may have marked the restoration of normal human relations in the area," the U.S. state secretary said as his 11-day journey ended before dawn.

Kissinger is due to report to President Nixon and to congressional leaders later in the day.

Before heading for home via London, Kissinger brought to Israel what he termed "a number of very constructive suggestions" from President Hafez Assad of Syria that may lead to negotiations between the two October war foes.

Kissinger also told Israeli leaders that Syria may be willing to turn over a list of war prisoners and to permit visits by the International Red Cross if the talks make substantial progress.

Privately, U.S. officials believe that a relaxation on the Syrian front is vital for further accords between Egypt and Israel since Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, for political reasons with the Arab world, cannot afford to move too far ahead of the other Arab states in dealing with Israel.

The Israeli government is to study Assad's ideas and then give its response to Kissinger.

Developments are not expected for two weeks.

"We will then see what follows," Kissinger said.

The RCMP Pays a Call

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

It might be called The Ellis Papers Affair – it has a new, instalment.

Title it: The RCMP pays a Call.

They were there in connection with some recent documents in his possession which the Conservative backbench critic has converted to ammunition in a one-man siege of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

He's said - the documents came from disgruntled officials and he's been posting the papers to sustain allegations of UIC administrative chaos. He's also kept his source secret.

If the federal officers - a staff sergeant and corporal from Toronto RCMP offices - hoped for any disclosures they were disappointed.

"I made it very clear at the outset I wouldn't tell - nor would I give them any hints," said Mr. Ellis.

As a result "the officers didn't even ask who gave me the papers."

Apparently, they didn't even ask to see the documents.

In Mr. Ellis' version, the closest the questioning came was when "they showed me a sample of a document and asked if some I had were like that. I agreed they were."

Mr. Ellis says he keeps most of the UIC documents in his MP's Ottawa office, secured under parliamentary immunity. But he admits there are "two or three I carry all the time."

It is not the second time in a week the RCMP have cropped up in the issue that, sees the Belleville politician attempting - - so far without success - - to force an inquiry into the UIC.

CTV television in Toronto has turned down a request from the RCMP for a tape of a film interview in which Mr. Ellis produced the documents.

The MP said the officers "obviously had been given some information by the UIC. They were under the impression all the documents were stamped confidential. Not one of the documents I have is stamped confidential."

"Some of the documents I could show - not all of course, I also pointed out much of the information is published by Statistics Canada after a two-month period. They were rather surprised by that."

Apparently the conversation also drifted into a discussion on "The merits of using this type of document."

"I pointed out normally I wouldn't condone this (using government information).

But there is nothing in them of a secret nature and the only reason for using them is to bring out the problems people know already exist (in the UIC) and nobody does anything about."

But, apparently the RCMP visit wasn't without some sharper overtones.

"I was very critical of the RCMP even being involved in this thing," said Mr. Ellis. "My respect for the force is such I don't believe they should be involved in this kind of nonsense."

The RCMP is being used by the UIC in its investigation in order to "intimidate" commission employees, claimed the MP.

After the CTV incident, UIC chairman Guy Cousineau said he was aware the investigation was going on, but he had not ordered it personally.

He said the UIC had a staff security division and they did use the services of the RCMP when necessary.

UIC officials have said the documents used by Mr. Ellis are outdated and misleading in the way they were presented to the public.

Preaching Once Again

Week Begins Slippery

Freezing rain, commencing late Sunday afternoon and continuing through the night, turned Quinte area roads into a massive skating rink and this morning forced cancellation of dozens of school buses throughout Hastings and Prince Edward counties.

Even buses making emergency runs from Belleville to Batawa and from Marmora to Deloro Stellite at Belleville cancelled their normal morning runs.

In the city the main travelled roads were not too slippery but side streets and city sidewalks were in a treacherous condition until public works crews got on the job early.

Except for the downtown West Street area, city garbage delivery service fell victim to the icy sidewalks with postal authorities stating all residential deliveries had been cancelled.

The same was true in Trenton with only business mail deliveries to be made.

Officials at both post offices said rural deliveries would be made — if the postal couriers could negotiate the ice-covered sidewalks.

City Engineer Wilbur Purnell said city sanding crews got started Sunday and most city streets were in passable condition this morning.

At least I haven't heard anything to the contrary," he said.

The engineer admitted, however, that the sidewalks were in a "terrible condition" until sanding crews got operational this morning.

City police reported only a few minor "fender benders" occurred as a result of the overnight freezing rain.

Ambulance attendants at Belleville reported no serious accidents in the immediate Belleville area, although a number of cars were said to have slid into the highways and into the ditch.

On the Napanee-Kingston district, Highway 401 was reported closed in two places as a result of trucks jackknifing across traffic lanes.

Rising temperature and rain commencing about nine o'clock this morning helped to cut the ice on the highways, but standards advised to remained in treacherous condition.

At Madoc, side streets and sidewalks were said in a "terrible condition" with residents wherever possible remaining indoors until the village sander made its rounds.

In the Tweed area the freezing rain put a sharp crust on the 19 to 20 inches of snow in the open fields.

But the ice storm that snarled ground transportation across the province did little to disrupt traffic at CFB Trenton.

Captain David Mann of Base Operations Command said it's "only a couple of flights" had to be diverted Sunday from landing at the base.

Two flights were cancelled this morning, but the personnel were to have cleared the ice from aircraft strips and taxiways by noon.

Dognappers At Large

Another incident in the chronicle of man's inhumanity to animals has been recorded in Belleville.

Last fall it was strychnine poisoning in the Moolgomey Blvd.-Edward St. area:

This time a dog was kidnapped and apparently confined for two days with its muzzle taped and tightly shut with its muzzle taped. The electric tape held the animal's jaws tightly closed. The dog, says its owner, was in poor condition and showed signs of having been confined.

Pedestrian Killed

The Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police are still trying to reach the next of kin of a Trenton man who was struck by a car and killed just west of CFB Trenton's main gate on Highway 2 early Sunday morning.

The man was killed at approximately 1:30 a.m. Sunday when he was, struck from the rear by a car driven by Alan Snowdon, 18, of RR 2 Trenton, police said. The man was walking east along the south side of the highway when the accident occurred.

The name of the deceased is being withheld pending positive identification and notification of the next of kin.

Alarm Box

Friday, Jan. 18, smoke investigation emailed from overheated furnace at 221 Dundas St., Bridge St. Apts., damage.

Woman Dies in Train Crash, Husband, Two Children Hurt

TWEED — A decision as to a possible inquest into the death of a Crookston woman following a car-train collision Saturday afternoon was still pending today.

The woman's husband and two children remain in Belleville General Hospital today — two days following the collision on the Quin-Mo-Lac Road, approximately 16 miles west of here.

Marjorie Rita Young, 51, RR 3 Madoc was pronounced dead at the scene by Madoc coroner C. C. Derry. Her husband, Richard Young, 62, is in critical condition in BGH intensive care unit with chest, leg, and head injuries.

One of five passengers in the vehicle driven by Mr. Young — Laura Casselman, 14, of Madoc remains in satisfactory condition with a broken left ankle. Also in hospital is Scott Baumbour, 12, of Crookston. A BGH spokesman said he was admitted and remains in serious condition with head and face injuries.

Treated and released were Christine Baumbour, 13, of Crookston, with bruises to the face and knee, and Treacy Lynn Ross, 3, of Seymour St., Madoc, with a bruised knee and injured eye.

The Young vehicle was proceeding east on the Quin-Mo-Lac Road when it came into day-long discussions with a government team headed by Premier William Davis, Clarke Rollins, MPP Hastings, was one of the speakers.

Optimism For Jobs

TRENTON — Despite sluggish economic factors elsewhere a number of "indicators," are pointing to an active employment year for Trenton.

Manpower records show that beginning in December, the number of jobs available at the end of 1973 and the first weeks of this year is large compared to the same months in past years.

Jim White, Manpower manager here, cautioned that this didn't mean Manpower would have jobs for everyone. But there is an active market which in itself is a good sign.

The CMC manager pointed to a number of Trenton industries that back up his prediction for a good year. These he listed as a record number of building permits pointing to active construction, expansion of a number of local industries, new industry and the latest announcement of a shopping mall.

While the mall will not be hiring staff for perhaps another year, as many as 100 men will be needed for its construction, expected to begin this spring.

According to the spokesman, the centre is receiving demands for workers every day, a particularly good sign at this time of year, traditionally the slow period in construction, tourist and outdoor trades.

Woman Welfare Administrator Objects

'Welfare Bum' Term Unfair

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — Evelyn Beaumont, Prince Edward County's new welfare administrator, says she resents the term "welfare bum" frequently used to describe the unemployed person accepting financial assistance.

Mrs. Beaumont notes that there are only "four or five" individuals on the county's entire caseload that seem reluctant to work when a job is offered. The others are eager to be employed. When her office receives calls for men to shovel snow Mrs. Beaumont can readily supply the labor.

One of the few women in Ontario to serve as head of a municipal welfare department, the newly-appointed administrator is a native of Prince Edward. She has been employed with the county's social services department for the past five years.

Mrs. Beaumont, hired initially as a field worker, says that she enjoyed close contact with welfare recipients through visits to their homes.

She observes that it is easier to work with these persons in the familiar surroundings of their homes than in social service offices.

Since her appointment as welfare administrator last December, Mrs. Beaumont comments that she has had less time to spend in visiting individuals on her caseload. She hopes to find opportunities for more personal contact with those receiving assistance.

Mrs. Beaumont speaks optimistically of Prince Edward's welfare statistics. She notes a sharp decrease in the past two years. She describes welfare costs as "down considerably" although there is an increase in the number of unemployables on the welfare role.

This is partially due to a great upsurge in unwed mothers and marital separations. Also, the employment situation in the county is not as favorable as it might be, she says.

The administrator comments that lack of winter works programs here this year has detrimental effects as there are many persons eager to work. She suggests that this program keeps men working and willing to work.

She adds that many couples receiving welfare report marital difficulties in the winter months when the husband is continually at home unemployed.

Trees Would Help Restore Fish Balance in Waterways

KINGSTON — A Belleville alderman Saturday called for a massive program of tree planting to help restore the quality of Ontario waterways.

The proposal was made Environment Minister James Auld by Alderman Stu Meeks at a regional policy discussion here by the province's Progressive Conservative party.

Denudation of land once rich in timber resources is a major factor affecting waterways — including the Bay of Quinte - - and fish life, he said.

Loss of trees results in higher water temeperatures of tributary streams and creeks which in turn upset the ecological balance in the watersheds.

Creating new tree plantations in the watersheds and dredging tributaries used as spawning beds would help restore once abundant fish life in areas like the Bay.

Such projects have specific significance for the Bay, said Ald. Meeks. Natural resources officials expect a run of pacific salmon and spalke - - now matured after being introduced on both shores of Lakes Ontario in recent times. - - may appear in the Bay in fall this year.

May Raise Limits For HOME Welch Tells Kingston Session

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Housing Minister Robert Welch said Saturday he is considering raising the income limitations to bring about a saving more than $12,000 a year, but less than $18,000, into the province's Home Ownership Made Easy H.O.M.E. program.

Mr. Welch, along with Premier William Davis, Agriculture Minister William Stewart and Environment Minister James Auld, took part in a one-day regional conference, fourth of a series sponsored by the Progressive Conservatives and designed to give citizens an opportunity to discuss issues with government leaders.

The 300-seat Memorial Hall in the old, domed city hall, built as the seat of Parliament when Kingston was the capital of Canada, was filled for most of the session.

Mr. Davis and his ministers made no speeches but answered questions from the audience. In between, they each took part in hour-long, open-line radio shows.

Mr. Welch told one questioner that the Ontario Housing Corp. OHC is making an "honest attempt" to look into the needs of low-income groups, since earning between $4,500 to $6,000 a year.

"But there is a large group of people in between who are above the income limitation of OHC but certainly below the income of the high-priced housing who are having problems.

Later, in an interview, Mr. Welch, who is also social development secretary, said he was thinking of those in the $12,000 to $18,000 income bracket who are "having some difficulty in the market, given land and housing prices today."

Only those earning $12,000 and less are eligible for the H.O.M.E. program where the government provides lower cost housing by leasing lots to owners to cut land costs.

"I'm thinking in terms of raising it beyond that," the minister said but would not predict how far he would go.

He said also although the H.O.M.E. program has proven a success, it still is not meeting the full demand for housing.

"We must find ways to move into there other income areas," Mr. Welch told his audience. "It is an area where we are going to have to move."

Mr. Stewart, responding to a farmer who expressed concerns about the loss of farming into residential and industrial uses, said governments at all levels have got to be "very much aware of the necessity of preserving our prime agricultural land."

He said that only a few months ago Canada had seemingly inexhaustible surpluses of wheat, seed grain, butter and industrial milk for making cheese.

Now the surpluses were gone, the result of a single major crop failure in other parts of the world. One crop failure in the Soviet Union could quickly deplete reserves of producing countries.

Kids: Adult Behavior Makes Discipline Tough Says Davis

KINGSTON, ONT. (CP) — his young daughters what they must or must not do when they have movies and television to influence them.

It was difficult to expect too much from children when they "see what the adult population is doing."

In reply to questions on urban sprawl, the premier said the government is convinced it can restrict and redirect growth as resources and the quality of life are maintained.

He said the government started with the parkway belt system in southern Ontario, the Niagara escarpment and the Toronto-centred region plan which are concepts to control growth by limiting populations in various areas.

He'd Just Bought It

Provincial police say William James Patterson, was taking clients to a view a property when his new vehicle was involved in a mishap with a car driven by Gerald Maurice Trudeau, 18, Tweed, on a curve in the Bogart county road east of here.

Damage to the Patterson car - - which police said he had just bought that day was about $1,000, and $500 to the Trudeau vehicle.

Chickens Killed

No damage was reported to the stake truck driven by Jens Pandura, 23, Brampton. Loss in chickens killed however, totalled approximately $100.

Man Killed In Mishap

TRENTON—An RR 1 Trenton man died Sunday morning after being struck by a car while walking along the third concession of Murray township.

Philip O'Kane, 69, of RR 1 Trenton was struck by a car driven by Douglas Scarrow of RR 7 Brighton.

Spokesman for the Brighton OPP said no charges will be laid.

LIP Cut Problems

TRENTON — The federal government, when it trimmed spending for operating budget for the Citizens Bureau, didn't cut back the work load — something that will have to be worked out before the bureau opens here Jan. 28.

The bureau, sponsored by the Quinte District Labor Council, received slightly more than $9,000 to operate in Trenton — one of the only three projects in the Prince Edward Hastings riding to receive Local Initiative Program support.

While the bureau was off to a slow start, turning into economic problems all is now ready for operation, pending the federal government concedes to some modifications.

Originally the bureau had applied for more funds and more staff members. Along with this, a generous program of ombudsman and consumer education work was being offered.

The government accepted the work guidelines but cut the staff to one and with local organizers saying all the planned work could not be completed with three employees.

Doug Sword, QDLC president, says a letter is on its way to LIP co-ordinators in Toronto for modifications in the project's terms of reference.

The bureau intends staying problems but is ready to enter into a project with local chambers of commerce and the labor council.

The bureau will open its new office — located on Dundas Street over Ostrander's Jewellers — next Monday.

Sign Over Planes To Venezuela

TRENTON—The last of a Canadian shipment of 18 fighter planes was signed over to Venezuelan ambassador Jesus Carbonell Izquierdo today.

In a brief ceremony at the air movements defence unit at CFB Trenton, the ambassador to Canada formally signed ownership papers for the two CF-5 fighters. The first planes were delivered about one year ago.

The entire shipment including spare parts, cost Venezuela $22 million. The aircraft were part of a Canadian Armed Forces surplus.

Folling the ceremony the ambassador had lunch in the officers' mess and shortly after returned to his embassy in Ottawa.

Snowmobile Noise

But aside from advising particular care with children aboard, and no jumping of snowbanks without knowing what is on the other side, and avoidance of damage to private property, there is not a word about the infringement of other people's rights and consideration these machines often cause.

We have been told for instance that the operation of snowmobiles close to homes in otherwise quiet rural neighborhoods can be an irritant, not only to adult residents but also to sleeping children and infants.

In Connecticut we understand there is a law forbidding the operation of snowmobiles within 500 feet of houses. When it is considered that in France the machines are forbidden altogether, the U.S. state's edict is the minimum that might be expected to protect the interests of non-users. Yet here in Canada there is no such law and the roar of snowmobile engines in the vicinity of homes is commonplace.

This raises the matter of the study the provincial Ministry of the Environment is supposed to be conducting into the incidence of noise in all its forms, with a view to bringing in legislation regulating it. It would be in the public interest if the ministry could issue a progress report. Is this subject still under study? When can we expect some meaningful legislation? If Environment Minister James Auld has some answers we would like to hear them.

Meanwhile the noise level of snowmobiles has not declined measurably since they first came on the scene, a fact confirmed by one of the recommendations in that ad we have been discussing: don't use a railroad right-of-way. You can't hear a train coming above the din of your own machine. . ." This noise problem is something manufacturers should be trying to solve.

Life of Toil

Thousands of immigrants have come to this country from Europe to "better themselves," as the saying goes.

A great many succeed in this endeavor, or at least find fresh opportunities, a comfortable life, material gains and spiritual satisfactions.

But in the life they have left behind there are often traditions, skills and a matchless environment that can never be replaced amid the materialism, tinsel, synthetic values and so-called standard of living of the world.

Toronto columnist Richard Needham once observed that lucky are the young people, often of immigrant families, who start up recreational businesses enjoying some success, but not too much, so that the kids absorb the example and motivating power of work in which their parents have been grounded — a salutary for many or some such activity in which the youngsters will take a natural interest and subsequently help in the business.

This does not mean of course that the new generation must follow slavishly in the pattern of the older generation, but it does serve them well for whatever career they may take up.

As for those who stay behind, in the "old country," the families who till the soil and harvest the wheat by hand, and grind it by age-old methods, life is hard to be sure — yet the beauty of the outdoor scene, the family solidarity, the artistic skills they bring to such spare-time work as handcraft, bring rewards seldom found in our society.

Joe Adair's film, Grecian Odyssey, in the Kiwanis travel and adventure series in recent days was eloquent of such a lifestyle, one in which perhaps three of four generations of a family may share. The strong, handsome faces of the old people, some still leading an active life — there was one woman of 102 — are products of this healthy way of life.

Would that some of this kind of environment could be duplicated in our own North American society. The closest to it probably is life on the farm, but for thousands of urban youngsters there will never be the tough but not unpleasant rigors of living from the soil, either here or, for that matter, in some rocky upland in Europe.

Basic Human Freedom Still Denied

The Soviet Union Remains a Land Under Totalitarianism

By JOHN D. HARBRON
Foreign Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

The Soviet Union like the Russian Empire before it, remains a vast human prison where free expression is a crime, ideas are suspect and a wicked police and prison system keeps the "dissent" locked up under the state's thumb.

One wonders how Russians century after century can be so cruel to each other, why this largest of the Slavic nations is incapable of any sustained period of representative rule after a thousand years of history.

The only relief was the few months of weak, representative rule in early 1917 when the Social Democrat Alexander Kerensky tried to found a democratic Russia with the czardom preserved if necessary, but without it if that was the only way.

Neither way was destined to work for the Russians. The Bolshevik revolutionaries committed to a new totalitarianism were waiting in the wings. As Kerensky vacillated, they took over.

In almost every sense except that of basic human freedoms, the U.S.S.R. is a very different place from Imperial Russia. Many smaller and newer states in the world with little hope of achieving Russian excellence in science, medicine, military technology, outer space exploration, are much further ahead in giving room to the things of the spirit.

Twenty years after the terror of the Stalin era, under Stalin, Russia is estimated to have 900 prison camps of varying kinds with about one million prisoners, political and criminal captives in them.

The experts on the Soviet prison system tell us this is a long way from the staggering estimate of 12 million Russians held in atrocious labor camps, many to die or be exterminated by them.

The entire ghastly system is exposed as never before in Alexander Solzhenitsyn's "new book, The Gulag Archipelago, 1918-1956. The name GULAG are Russian-language initials for The Main directorate for Camps, once known as GUMZ in Stalin's time or The Main Directorate for Places of Confinement.

The major agency for arrest, surveillance and control of Soviet citizens is of course the KGB, once the MVD and before that the NKVD, but very much all one and the same, the world's largest secret police apparatus.

What we hear of the KGB is largely associated with its overseas activities, spying and foreign intelligence work. Within the U.S.S.R. it is believed between 300,000 and perhaps two million Russian citizens "moonlight" in their drab economy by spying and making reports on fellow citizens to the KGB headquarters in all major cities and towns.

According to a British specialist on Soviet prisons, there are four main kinds at present. There are the "severe regime" camps for minor criminal offences, "hardened regime," "strict" and "special" regime camps, delightfully reserved for those Russians who want to say and write what they believe about their society, or who just happen to be Soviet Jews.

And while even former prison inmates now escaped and living in Europe and the United States say that conditions are nowhere like the ones Mr Solzhenitsyn outlines from the Lenin and Stalin eras, they are still places where the indignities of semi-starvation and forced labor remain the norm.

In all our friendly discussions with Moscow about most-favored-nation status in trade, mutual associations on science and northern development, let us not forget with what kind of dreary, anti-human system we associate.

The U.S.S.R. is an almost 60-year-old prison society, if we forget the earlier centuries-long era of the oppressive czars.

Northern Ontario's Recreational Requirements

By JIM WATERS
From the Toronto Bureau of the Intelligencer

TORONTO — The Ontario cabinet is expected to decide within a few weeks whether to proceed with a potential $100 million recreational project in northern Ontario, scrap the entire scheme, or add to the $250,000 already spent on studies for Maple Mountain, 60 miles north of Sudbury.

Robert Brock, director of the industry and tourism ministry's special projects branch, is hopeful much of the debate and speculation both at Queen's Park and throughout the north will be resolved shortly.

"We naturally would like a decision one way or another, or at least some form of direction," he said in a recent interview. Cautious enough to give no indication which way he thinks cabinet is headed, Mr. Brock declined an opportunity to assess the feasibility of carving out ski slopes, installing a sewage plant and providing other essential services — the government's contribution towards attracting private developers.

"It would be pure speculation if I was to comment," he said.

Far more eager to express his opinion is Ed Havrot, the conservative member of the legislature for Timiskaming, whose riding takes in Maple Mountain. A staunch proponent of the project from the outset two years ago, Mr. Havrot is convinced it could effectively boost the area's dwindling economy.

He points out Northern Ontario has an unemployment rate of about 18 per cent, more than twice the figure for the entire province. The towns near Maple Mountain, namely Cobalt, Haileybury and his home, Kirkland Lake, have more than 20 per cent out of work, he says.

Mr. Havrot is fearful "a handful of conservationists" may convince the government Maple Mountain should remain as it is — a steep forested ridge accessible only by canoe or snowmobile.

Bending somewhat to the arguments of the 150-strong Save Maple Mountain Committee, he says the whole concept of the project is based on preserving the environment, not covering the cliff with concrete as some of the critics would have us believe.

Both opposition parties in the legislature have coined their own catch phrases for Maple Mountain in expressing their opposition, naturally enough, to it.

"Ontario Place North", Liberal Leader Robert Nixon calls it. He claims it will only "add to the fiscal burden that Ontario taxpayers are staggering under."

Perhaps even more forcible are the NDP members, such as Bud Germa (Sudbury) and Floyd Laughren (Nickel Belt), who have condemned the scheme as nothing more than "a giant hot dog stand". Almost all municipalities within fifty miles of the site support the proposal, but the New Democrat caucus has passed a resolution opposing it.

Preliminary plans call for two phases of development. The first would involve expenditures of $42 million—$14 million of it by the province—for accessory tennis courts and a riding stable as well as hotels and condominiums on a 250-acre townsite.

Stage two would essentially increase accommodation space with ancillary transportation facilities for another $45 million or so.

Government planners predict 1,200 workers would be involved in construction and an additional 900 year-round jobs would be created. Opponents say outlays would fill the top-level jobs while natives of the area do little except wait on tourists.

Real estate prices in the area are rising rapidly, according to Mr. Havrot, as "a lot of hot shots are just waiting around". He hopes to make one last plitch to Premier William Davis and Industry and Tourism Minister Claude Bennett before cabinet decides Maple Mountain's fate.

Health and Rights of Non-smokers

Roscoe Drummond is The Christian Science Monitor It is all to the good that the federal government is speaking out more openly about the evils of cigarette smoking — the injury it does to people, to society and to civil rights; that is, the right of nonsmokers to be subjected to smoking pollution in public places against their will.

The health hazards from smoking — and from exposure to smoking — are much greater than first believed, but more needs to be done in the field of public awareness.

Steps taken thus far by both governmental and private agencies to a'ert people to these hazards have not been equal to the need.

It was nearly four years ago that Congress required that every pack of cigarettes sold in the U.S. carry the words: "Warning — the Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

But two years after the Surgeon General's warning and one year's ban on TV ads, cigarette sales in the U.S. went up a record total of 672 billion. Last year sales reached 561.7 billion and in the 10 months ending April of this year, cigarette sales rose 2.5 percent.

The tobacco industry, after being ruled off the television airwaves, naturally took to the most alluring advertising in the mass circulation publication. This is very likely the explanation why cigarette sales have increased those the television ban.

Education can and should be the two-edged sword; that is, the use to publicity to alert the public to the injurious consequences of cigarette smoking and the denial of advertising to those seeking to cultivate and increase customers.

Before attempting to reform people by law — that is, by a ban on smoking — we ought to be doing a better job of seeking reform by better education. Obviously there is a pervasive unbended smoking habit, but it doesn't make sense to allow the tobacco industry to do everything it can to increase that habit while the government is seeking to decrease it.

A Local Watergate?

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

It must be obvious to all by now that we have a little Watergate here in Belleville.

Jack Ellis' vendetta with the UIC has assumed ridiculous proportions with the advent of the RCMP and their request for papers taken from the UIC business files.

Mr. Ellis' refusal at first to produce, and later to explain that they were only photostat copies with all fingerprints removed, is real Watergate material.

Obviously Mr. Ellis encouraged this disgruntled employee or employees to back up their complaints with evidence of mismanagement instead of advising them to contact their department heads.

I suggest he was led up the garden path.

I think it is high time that Mr. Ellis quit this nonsensical cloak and dagger game and start putting his talents to work for the benefit of his constituents and the riding.

In conclusion I feel sure that the UIC will iron out any difficulties to the satisfaction of all.

A Critic of Humanism

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

Patricia Young of Vancouver, writes many letters during the course of a year which could be responded to in antithetical terms and, perhaps, should so be responded to.

To select just one of her letters and that the one in which she conveys her Christmas greetings to readers, as the letter to respond to in critical terms, may seem unkind, but her blanket criticism of "humanists" as the new persecutors of the concept of Christmas cannot be allowed to pass without, at least, a minimal response.

I do not know whether Patricia Young will see this letter. It is difficult to believe that she reads all the newspapers in which her letters are published across Canada but just for the record it should be stated that there is at least one North American organization which professes to be Christian and which at the same time sees something unchristian in the celebration of Christmas. I refer to Ambassador College, a separate corporation associated with the Worldwide Church of God, Pasadena, California, with a Vancouver office at P.O. Box 64, Station "A".

In the December, 1973 issue of its publication, "The Plain Truth," after making some statements about the pagan origins and customs of Christmas, it concludes its article by saying that the world thinks it needs a pagan, utterly non-Christian holiday like Christmas because in reality it needs the spirit of God.

I write this, not to publicize Ambassador College, but just to demonstrate that the simplistic approach to "Christmas and its persecutors" of Patricia Young may, perhaps, score a point in her current propaganda campaign, but her letter is not necessarily in the true spirit of Christmas, and thus should be taken with a grain of salt.

Advertising and Mass Media

Brantford Expositor

Today only the mass media can reach "the public". Stores and industries recognize this. Their advertising is seen everywhere. But it seems that only in recent years have governments made major use of advertisements, outside national emergencies.

The Ontario government recently launched two $200,000 advertising campaigns. They are now using public funds to advertise what could be, at best, to correct political mistakes."

Transportation Minister Carton defended the ads. They stressed "a choice for everyone", told residents of smaller cities about available subsidies for all kinds of public transportation systems and promoted the dial-a-bus approach.

Right or wrong, the governing party inevitably derives some secondary benefit from the government advertisement. But governments must fully use the tools needed to do the job to compete for the public's attention. Politicians are no longer put by making speeches from tree stumps or street corners — or the 20th century equivalent,

Two Injured In Collision

A two-car collision at the intersection of North Front St. and Bell Blvd. sent two Ajax, Ont., women to Belleville General Hospital Saturday; Both were treated for cuts and bruises and released.

Elinor Hall, 47, of Ajax, proceeding south on North Front was making a left turn onto Bell Blvd when struck by a car driven north on North Front by Thomas D. Russell, 63, of RR 1 Foxboro.

The driver and passenger in the Hall vehicle, Marilyn Hall, 21, of Ajax, were taken to BGH by ambulance, city police said.

Madoc Board Breaks Ground On Organizing New Centre

MADOC — Deciding what would be the most financially beneficial location of a new community centre for Madoc is the main priority its Board of Trustees initially.

At a recent meeting attended by Clark T. Rollins MPP Hastings, and interested area residents the board set out to learn what financial assistance is available for the undertakking.

Mr. Rollins expressed a willingness to do everything possible to assist the community in its project. He advised the board to begin by holding a meeting with Bancroft village council. Bancroft has recently completed construction of a new arena and it was felt that their experience could be most beneficial to the new committee.

The board learned from Mr. Rollins a first move would be to seek forgiveness on grants already paid for the old arena, to become eligible for a full grant on the new one.

Carnival Toques Symbol of Fun

Get a hat.

A toque to be precise.

And, while you're at it, get a badge.

The toque and badge went on sale in the city this week. Funds raised help offset costs of the big five-day cold weather community event starting Jan. 30.

The items also boost the carnival atmosphere.

The more people publicly wearing the distinctive red toques, the greater the community feeling of common involvement mocked for such an events, believe Belleville Jaycees who are coordinating tis organization.

The toques and badges went on sale Saturday at the Canadian Legion, Army Navy and Airforce Veterans Association and the Quinte Mall where they are being sold by a sorority XI. Alpha Mu chapter of Beta Sigma Phi.

Programs, designed as eye-catching—easy to refer—them make the carnival's detailed events easy reading.

They will be sold publicly this week says Jaycee Glenn Wardell, carnival committee co-chairman.

For some, the carnival starts early.

For instance, there's the fishing derby at Zwick's Island Park, Jan. 26, a secondary school hockey tournment, Jan. 27 at Dick Ellis Arena. Meantime, a snow-grving is underway already has started with registration at the Front Street Barber Salon.

Fugitive Nabbed

See-Pick has done it again.

The Belleville Police department's hook-in with the RCMP's central information data bank in Ottawa snared another criminal over the weekend.

PC James McMullen was making a routine weekend check of guests at motels and hotels in Belleville early Sunday morning when a See-Pick check revealed that a guest at a North Front Street motel was wanted by the police in Western Canada and northern Ontario.

The man is wanted by the RCMP in Vancouver, Calgary and Winnipeg for a variety of theft, fraud and false pretence charges. He is also wanted by Ontario Provincial Police in northern Ontario for a series of fraud and false pretence charges.

Robert John Conway, 30, of RR 1 Carlsbad Springs, Ont., is being held in custody pending the arrival of RCMP officers, who will take him to Winnipeg where he will be arraigned on all charges.

Fred Barton: Ad Veteran

Newspapers Were Fred Barton's Life

The man who was an important — if almost anonymous — link between Belleville businessmen and consumers has retired.

The Intelligencer begins this new chapter in Belleville in the department he organized and ran for more than a quarter-century — advertising.

He directed the function of the Quinte district's daily newspaper's most important business department — advertising is any publication's vital revenue source — for a time when the area finally began expanding into the community it now is.

He ends his career as a lifelong newspaper businessman.

Born on the north shore of New Brunswick, he started as a general job employee with a weekly newspaper in Windsor, N.S., in 1926. Later he was a type, ran a linotype machine as he worked his way up through several weeklies. Eventually he went into advertising and the dailies.

He worked on the Halifax Herald then came west to Ontario in 1931 to the Peterborough Examiner. In 1946 he transferred to The Intelligencer, as advertising manager.

As manager he ran a department consisting of himself and a woman assistant for a career with 7,000 circulation. Belleville then had a population of 18,000.

"We'd often put out a 10-page paper." Mr. Barton recalled. By dint of hard work, he'd doubled the need for personnel in his department within a year.

Today, throughout the Quinte area, The Intelligencer counts a circulation of about 17,000 with much of the countryside it once served now is lightly populated.

In fact, when he and his wife built their home at the corner of Gallidale and Victoria it was the last house on the city's outskirts.

Such lifestyle changes are reflected in the business: When the Bartons came to Belleville its business was Front St. New plazas, malls, shopping centres are monuments to the change to total urbanization.

Nonetheless, newspaper advertising remains just as important to a community as the business itself, believes the veteran advertising official.

"You can't put out a paper without news and news costs money," he says. "So advertising still is the main source of revenue."

But, even through the years of growth and change he holds to a basic advertising formula: "The advertisement first has to really have something to say. It must present something either the public will buy or wants to buy, and I still don't buy catchy headings. You have a message, and you must be presented as clearly as possible so there's no misunderstanding about it."

There are variations, inevitably.

For instance, one of the most horrendously perpetual of any newspaper's subconscious error, that in the pressure of daily deadlines, gets published despite all the checking apparatus. For Mr. Barton the one that still lives in the fullpaper taken out while he was working in Peterborough by a menswear opening.

"He phoned the next day about it and he hit the roof," recalls Mr. Barton. "Then — for the next two days he sold so many suits that he sold right out."

In Belleville, Mr. Barton was known as a quiet newspaperman who saw his purpose as a assistant and advisor to his paper's clients.

"Over the years you're dealing with these merchants and all volunteer programs at the local level, you develop from a salesman into a friend."

Now starting his retirement, he has no immediate, set plans. However, at last he has time, he says, to more thoroughly pursue and enjoy his friendships.

Open House Ends Week

The Belleville Family YMCA ended its week-long two-fold celebration Sunday afternoon with what general secretary Di Diamantides called a "success."

Between 400 an 500 people attended the open house at the east-end facilities yesterday afternoon to participate in 45-minute swim periods, and munch on cookies with coffee while talking to various board members concerning programs the Y provides.

"There was a steady flow of people," said Mr. Diamantides. "Some people even insisted on buying memberships, though we had not prepared for that."

The open house was the culmination of a celebration of National YMCA Week across Canada, as well as the commemoration of the 80th anniversary of the Belleville branch.

Earlier, Mr. Diamantides had said, "The purpose of the open house is to make the Y known to the community and show people it's an integral part of the community."

"We had a good program and quite a few people came to visit and to see it," the secretary said.

Flare Drop This Week

Flare - dropping exercises are being planned by military air search-rescue teams over Lake Ontario off Prince Edward County this week.

Such practice runs, held annually, frequently generate phone calls about Unidentified Flying Objects. So the service now issues advance notices of the exercises.

What prompts the UFO reactions are the flares, burning with an intensity of 2 million watts, slowly descending by parachute.

The flares, dropped 8,000 feet from an Otter aircraft burn up to five minutes, says a CFB official.

The exercise is scheduled off the southwestern tip of Prince Edward on three nights when weather conditions are best, between 6.30-10 p.m.

One to four flares may be dropped at a time.

Club Canara Goes On Sale Nationally

Club Canara and its surrounding land will go on a cross-Canada realty listing this week, says J. T. Campbell, president of the owner group, Canadian National Recreation Association Ltd.

CNRA executives decided to offer the asset as a single property — a nine-acre holding flanked by Canadian National Railways that includes the club, a recreation field and big parking lot.

Although he quoted no price or exact estimates, Mr. Campbell said realty experts in the last few days reported an appraisal "over $300,000."

The entire holding was the outgrowth of a once-active rallecenders' recreation group, Club Canara opened in 1957, and — with its banqueting halls and meeting rooms — became a centre of social and community business activity. The recreation part has long been a major city ball diamond.

CNRA stockholders voted Nov. 23 to dispose of the assets. A prime factor in the decision was inability to maintain the level of activity for events that included some of the biggest functions in the area. The club runs is own catering service.

The club is busy as in any past year and bookings are being accepted until the end of June.

In fact, says Mr. Campbell, the enterprise is in "very good financial shape — the best financial position we've been in for the last five years."

There are no liabilities.

Immediately following sale of the property, plans are to dissolve the CNRA and spread the net proceeds among the shareholders — all railroaders, many now retired — or their beneficiaries.

Word Changed

Whatever other alterations take place in Hastings County's official plan, one change has already been approved.

It's a single word.

At one of the public meetings debating the plan the word "conveyance" involved with subdivision control was queried.

The county planning board later agreed on a supported clarification "Conveyance" now becomes "severance" - on pages 48, 49, 50.

You're Never Too Young

You may be little and young, but it's never too early to start kicking up your heels and get a bit of exercise under your belt. Peter Little, 8, was doing just that Sunday at the open house, perhaps hoping to stave off a middle-age paunch. Not to be outdone, the ladies got into the swing of things. Using exercise bicycles, Margaret Koleszar, 10, (from left) and Carol Rosenkrcher, 9, pedal their way to trimness. Only at 10 they still have little to worry about. Over 400 people attended the open house Sunday afternoon for activities and the opportunity to speak to members of the Y board.

Quinte Cuisine

Helen Sallans, 14, was recommended to Quinte Cuisine because of her carrot cake. Helen, a grade ten student at Quinte Secondary School, has liked to bake and putter about in the kitchen since she was a young child. She started making this recipe from her Aunt Dorothy, about two years ago.

Carrot Cake

three-quarters cup mazola
corn oil
1 cup grated carrots
2 eggs
1 cup white sugar
2 oz. nuts
1½ cups flour
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. salt

Mix the oil, sugar, eggs, carrots and nuts.

Mix all the dry ingredients and add to the first mixture.

Do you know any good cooks? The Intelligencer is looking for cooks in the area willing to share their recipes with our readers. If you're a good cook, or if you know one, write The Women's Department, The Intelligencer. Be sure to include his or her address and phone number.

Family Illness Records May Reduce Birth Defects

EDMONTON (CP) — Extensive family histories should be kept to help people determine their chances of having defective children, says Dr. Ramesh Bhambhani, a genetic counsellor at the University of Alberta.

"There's not a single individual free of harmful genes," he said in an interview. The average person has three to five genes which, given proper conditions, may result in a retarded or diseased child.

"Statistically, at least five per cent of all live births are victims of one major genetic disorder or another."

However, 60 to 70 conditions can be detected biochemically in the parents and genetic counsellors can tell them the percentage risk they face of a recurring affliction, said Dr. Bhambhani.

"Beyond this, counsellors can present the alternatives—which include therapeutic abortion, adoption and artificial insemination."

Recent developments have given geneticists more to work with, he said. Techniques have been perfected to identify certain kinds of genetic deficiencies and liberalization of social attitudes has enabled people to consider alternatives to bearing afflicted children.

The first steps in genetic counselling are obtaining an accurate diagnosis of conditions present in the family, said Dr. Bhambhani.

"Many disorders tend to look alike, but their patterns of inheritance are different. Unless an accurate diagnosis is established, erroneous advice may be given."

There are many different types of genetic disorders, depending often on the environment and care of the individuals involved.

Cystic fibrosis is relatively common in North America while Tay-Sachs disease, which affects infants and can result in mental retardation, is prevalent in the Jewish population, particularly among Ashkenazi Jews.

Both of these are so-called recessive conditions and can be detected in the parents by a blood sample.

"People have two doses of each gene—one could be normal and one abnormal. In the case of recessive conditions a child must receive two doses of the abnormal gene—one from each parent—to be affected."

So the genetic counsellor can tell the parents, if they are both carriers of the abnormal gene, that they have a 25-per-cent risk of having an afflicted child.

Tay-Sachs disease is among a group that can also be detected by pre-natal tests, involving the extraction and analysis of cells from the fluid surrounding the fetus, said Dr. Bhambhani.

"What many people don't realize is that they may not have the symptoms of a particular disorder but can still carry the gene."

Phenylketonuria is one such disorder, caused by excessive amino acid in the system. If it is detected early enough a child can be placed on a diet low in amino acid and can be free of symptoms.

"But if people aren't aware they are carriers, and their child isn't treated accordingly, he can suffer severe mental retardation and early death."

Genetic conditions include diabetes, in which the pancreas produces insufficient insulin, and mongolism, believed caused by the inheritance of one too many chromosomes.

In many genetic disorders only one dose of an abnormal gene is necessary for a child to be affected. Others can only be passed from mother to son or father to daughter. Hemophilia, where blood fails to clot, and red-green color blindness are among these.

"Genetic counselling is not without problems" since some aspects involve the moral and legal questions of abortion, adoption and artificial insemination," said Dr. Bhambhani.

"These issues must be discussed . . . geneticists will have to start taking lay people into their confidence."

Most genetic counselling now is done in connection with hospitals. The best approach would be to set up clinics where geneticists, doctors, psychiatrists, clergymen and lawyers all are available to give their opinions to the public, he said.

Women's Council Critical Family Planning Lack Sexism, Discrimination

TORONTO (CP) — Local public health units will be getting letters from Ontario's advisory council on the status of women to ask why they are not operating family-planning clinics.

The council decided to write after hearing from three of its 16 members at its monthly meeting Thursday.

Of 43 health units in Ontario, 17 have birth-control clinics.

Barbara Landau of Thornhill, reporting on a meeting with provincial government officials said a family-planning program is expected to begin April 1, with a budget of $500,000. She said she understands abortion counselling is not to be included.

Lin Good of Kingston expressed the council's response when she said, "It's not just family planning we're concerned with, but all the ancillary circumstances that we're covering under the euphemism."

The council also agreed to try to convince school boards that sexism in text books and teaching is an area of concern.

It had written boards to ask their policies on hiring and training women principals, and on sexism. Philip Manuel of Toronto said many replies said women will not apply for principals' jobs, and that sexism is not an issue in their jurisdictions.

Mrs. Good told the council about a female articling law student in Kingston who was told she could not wear pants suits to work if she wanted to keep her articling job. The student has since moved to another firm.

Chairman Laura Sabia of St. Catharines said she was delighted that Ontario has appointed its first woman deputy minister, Dorothea Crittenden.

WEDDINGS

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM NICOL

Nicol — McMullen

Holly and mums decorated the altar of St. Paul's United Church in Stirling for the December wedding of Janie Lee McMullen and William Nicol.

Rev. John May performed the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph McMullen of Stirling and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Nicol of Petersborough.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a traditional gown of white satin, with a lace yoke edged with a lace flounce, a stand-up lace ruffle at the neck and lace sleeves. A deep flounce of lace at the hem formed a full train. Her Spanish style headpiece held a cathedral - length veil edged with lace and she carried red carnations with pine.

Maid of honor Marsha Coldwill of Cobourg wore a red satin gown in a coat-dress style. Identical dresses were worn by the bridesmaids Susan and Betty McMullen, sisters-in-law of the bride. All the attendants carried white mums tied with red ribbon.

Best man was Michael Cleary of Orillia. The ushers were Donald Freedenburg of Peterborough, the groom's cousin, and Fred Nichol of Vancouver, the groom's brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Nichol now live on Markham Road, Scarborough.

MR. AND MRS. STEPHEN WEESE

Weese — Bishop

Christ Church Cathedral was the setting for the January 2 wedding of Luella Anne Bishop and Stephen Mowbray Weese, performed by Canon R. D. B. Wright.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Bishop and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Weese of Carrying Place.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white embossed silk velvet with a white satin band under the empire bodice and a matching church bow. Her short veil had a headpiece of matching velvet flowers, and she carried salmon-colored tea roses with baby's breath and green ivy.

The matron of honor, Sharlene MacKinnon, wore an emerald green gown of delustred satin with a high ruffled collar and ruffles on the bodice and cuffs.

The bridesmaids Julie Bishop, the bride's sister, and Susan Bishop, the bride's cousin, dressed identically to the matron of honor. The attendants' flowers were blue daisies, pink carnations, baby's breath and ivy.

Best man was the groom's brother, Wesley Weese, and the ushers were Michael MacKinnon and Peter Hatfield.

After a dinner and dance held in the Fiesta 'Room of the Hotel Quinte, the newly-married couple travelled to Lake Placid, N.Y. on their wedding trip.

People and Events

Quinte Medical Secretaries held their January meeting in Education Hall with a general workshop. The meeting was chaired by President Jackie Vivian.

A formation by O.M.S.A. of a Placement Service for medical secretaries was discussed. Cancellation was announced of the grug seminar scheduled for this month. Committee Chairman Denni Koechlin reported that the program for the group's Annual Clinic Day April 27th is taking shape, with three speakers in the morning and a panel discussion for the afternoon session. Plans for a fall fashion show will get under way with a committee meeting next week at the home of Committee Chairman Mae Cathcart.

It was voted that funds be allotted for purchase of hospital equipment, with reminders that supermarket tapes still mean money towards the purchase of non-budgeted hospital equipment.

Mrs. Koechlin raised the question of potable OHIP Workshops being held here on a regular basis to offer assistance with individual problems, and to promote better understanding of OHIP policy.

Confirmation is pending of a tour of Loyalist College for next month's meeting on February 13th.

Pioneering Woman Airline Executive

TORONTO (CP) — Anne Bodnarchuk, who directs computer and systems services for Air Canada, is one of the few women executives employed by the airline.

"I'm a pioneer in one field—automation—and that's enough," she said in an interview. "I can't be a pioneer in the women's movement too."

Miss Bodnarchuk, one of three daughters of Ukrainian parents, grew up in Saskatchewan. She thinks her childhood in an all-girl household helped later in her career, because "there was never any division of boy's work and girl's work."

After graduating in mathematics from Queen's University, she took a job with Manufacturers Life in Toronto but switched to Air Canada because she wanted to travel.

That ambition hasn't been realized: "The best I seem to manage is one good vacation in the sun every year."

Miss Bodnarchuk's first job with Air Canada 14 years ago was doing operational research in the maintenance department. She now directs a staff of seven men and is indirectly responsible for 50 employees, many of them women.

"The attitude of other male executives has always been fair," she said, and she believes women are no slower for some of the obstacles they face in the business world.

"Women's attitude to women and the image that women project must change and that is a slow process. However, there is a lot of awareness today and it will happen."

Miss Bodnarchuk is the first woman president of the Canadian Operational Research Society and serves on an advisory committee to the communications department in Ottawa.

Shadows and Sunshine

Students and visitors to Loyalist College discovered that a walk from the parking lot to the Kente building is a lovely way to start the day on a sunny winter morning. The groups of cedar trees left by the landscapers around the college provide shelter and beauty for the hundreds of people who travel the path daily.

Ann Landers

A Sin to Be Gay?

Dear Readers: This will be another first. I have never before cut my readers in on a three-way correspondence, but today's the day. The following letter was sent to me by my good friend, and a principal psychiatric consultant, Dr. Zigmon Lebensohn of Washington, D.C.

Dear Epple: I very much appreciated your printing my letter on homosexuality and your gracious comments about it.

I have already received several letters as a result of that column and am happy to say that most of them have been laudatory. A few took sharp exception to my statements, however, and I herewith enclose a real hiss, along with my answer. Since you are much better at this sort of thing, I would appreciate any suggestions you might have for dealing with such mail. Yours—Zig

Below is the letter to Dr. Lebensohn.

Dear Dr. Lebensohn: Most of the letters published in Ann Landers's column are sickening, but yours on homosexuality was the worst.

Homosexuals are sinners. They are society polluters who violate the laws of God. Only spiritual illiterates consider they have an obligation to be more understanding and compassionate toward unrepentant sinners than our Divine Saviour Himself.

Homosexuality is vehemently condemned in the sacred scriptures. Therefore homosexuality cannot be categorized as anything but sin.—Mrs. M.D. of Seattle

Here is Dr. Lebensohn's reply.

Dear Mrs. M.D.: I read your views on homosexuality with great interest. Since I am a physician and psychiatrist, I do not profess to be an expert at diagnosing "sinners." I will leave that to the theologians and to the consciences of the people involved.

I would like to remind you that the sacred scriptures to which you refer also preach the value of understanding, compassion and the love of one's fellow man. It might surprise you to learn that some of the men you most admire or whose writing, music and paintings have given you the greatest joy may have been homosexuals.

I hope you will give this matter some thought and possibly discuss it with some members of the clergy. Sincerely, Zigmond M Lebensohn, M.D.

Dear Zig: Your letter to Mrs. M.D. was beautiful. You don't always get help from me, or anyone else. Thanks for sharing this correspondence.

Dear Ann Landers: I noticed, with disgust, that you reran that anti-Christmas-letter letter. I didn't care for it the first time. I liked it even less the second.

My husband and I have been sending Christmas letters for several years and our friends and relatives say they are wonderful. What's more, we love to receive them. It gives us an opportunity to catch up on what's happening to the people we care about.

Granted some of the letters lay it on a bit heavy and are long. I agree that anything beyond one page is a bore, but most Christmas letters are delightful.

I feel let down when I open a large envelope and find only a printed card and a name at the bottom, also printed—no evidence that it was sent by a human. I'll miss the newsletter, any time.—Chicago

Dear Chicago: You spoke for thousands. Thanks for writing.

Learning Aircraft Service

BARRIE, Ont. (CP) — Ten women at nearby Base Borden will spend the next 7½ months learning aircraft servicing, welding and auto body repairs.

Their enrolment in the metal-working course is part of the response by the Canadian Forces to recommendations by the 1967 royal commission on the status of women that women be accepted on an equal basis in trades previously open only to male servicemen.

The forces have also gone along with other recommendations by the commission that prohibition of enrolment of married women be discontinued; that release of women from the forces because of pregnancy be discontinued and that the same duration of enlistment apply to both sexes.

Another commission recommendation permitting enrolment of women in military colleges has not been followed but a forces newsletter says they have been admitted into all subsidized university education programs.

Maj. Bernard Marsden, British exchange officer in charge of the metal-working course, said he is delighted by the interest and ability of his female students.

They have their own residence on the base but take their meals with the men.

A forces spokesman said 809 women a year are being recruited to bring their total number to a projected level of 8,000 by 1981. This would be an increase of more than 1,500 over the quota set by the defence council in 1955.

Kids Conned By Ads

In a brief submitted to the Parliamentary Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, CAC called for the banning of any advertisements on programs for pre-school children and the abolishment of all television advertising directed to children. The Association claims children do not make purchases and such advertising uses them as a lever to blackmail parents into buying products. CAC National Headquarters is located at 100 Gloucester Street, Ottawa.

The High Fry

The October issue of CANADIAN CONSUMER, official publication of Consumers' Association of Canada, pinpoints the dangers of high-rise fires. The Association calls on Canadian schools of architecture to make studies of the National Building Code, with particular reference to fire protection, a pre-requisite in architectural training. CAC National Headquarters is located at 100 Gloucester Street, Ottawa.

Back in Rut After Holiday

Dear Doris: Now that Christmas is over I seem to be back in the same old rut. No one calls me and I'm lonesome. I must be at fault, but I'm just not able to put on meals, and the only driving I do at night — with my poor eyesight — is driving home from my babysitting job, which is fast occasional. — Retired From Teaching.

Dear Retired: What a curse is loneliness! And I get letters like yours with nearly every mail.

I realize your energy is not boundless. It takes more than you've got to put on dinner parties and bring friends to you that way. And getting out has its hazards.

One of the things we manage in a hurry occasionally, and when there are one or maybe two people we simply want to have a conversation with, is a "dessert mini-party". This means the persons we invite have their own main course at home and turn up at our house at seven-seven-thirty, when we will have a special dessert and coffee ready for them.

People are perfectly happy to fall in with this. They want our company too; and you have friends in the same boat you are in, who want your company. Could you make a dessert recipe, a favorite of yours, and make up enough, ahead, for two or three?

Dear Doris: My brother and I would like to give our Mom a Family Ring for her birthday. Mom was a widow and remarried. We like our stepfather very much.

Our problem: Would it be proper to put his birthstone on as well as our own Dad's? We would like to, but others disagree. What do you think, Doris? We'll take your advice. — Family Affair.

Dear Family: Family Rings are the latest in jewellery. The etiquette has yet to reach the etiquette books and decisions are individual.

How do you think your mother would feel about the matter? Your family has changed, taken on another dimension with a stepfather. If both marriages have been happy ones you, as a family, have gained a lot from both failures.

From where I sit, it would seem most broadminded and affectionate to design a ring with all three birthstones in it. Propriety depends a good deal on common sense and kindness. What would make your stepfather feel he really belonged, more than his birthstone in a family ring?

Confidential to Retired: My dear: It is to be regretted that some types of "divorced women, desperately alone, will cling to any married man handy. This woman may be making herself particularly attractive to your husband.

He is party to that too and should honor his marriage. If you care about him, do your best to make home a pleasant place to be and yourself a pleasant person to be with. Failing any response, seek counselling from a trained social worker.

(Doris receives 10,000 letters a year, from readers. Please remember to supply the stamp for your reply, addressing your letter to her in care of this newspaper.)

Women in Schools

TORONTO (CP) — In a Labor Canada survey carried out in eight Canadian provinces during 1968-69, women were found to constitute 29.5 per cent of teachers and principals. During the year, there were 1,622 women teachers in these provinces. The proportion of women ranged from 36.9 per cent in Prince Edward Island to 17 per cent in British Columbia.

Results 'Fantastic' When Newspapers Replace Textbooks

GRANITE CITY, Ill. (AP) — An educational experiment abandoned the standard classroom textbook for a daily newspaper has had "unbelievable" results, says the principal at Emerson Elementary School.

"It's just never happened before," said Al Wilson. "We're in a school where we largely teach in a remedial situation; a high percentage of our kids come from culturally deprived backgrounds."

"Never before have we achieved an average of a year's growth in one school year," Wilson noted as he displayed the scores his 360 pupils made on a nationally standardized test of how much they learned over a year.

Wilson and his teachers attributed the results to the use of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat to teach all subjects from kindergarten to sixth grade.

In the program, a newspaper story about a new labor contract becomes the subject of a problem in mathematics; placelines on a various pretext provide a geography lesson; a natural disaster or a space flight becomes a news lesson and editorial cartoons, pictures and advertisements supply the grammarians with essay topics.

Standard textbooks are used only for reading.

In nearly every category covered by standardized achievement tests, Wilson said that the average score for each class — from kindergarten through the sixth grade showed a progression of a full year "and in some cases as much as a year and a half."

But Wilson and his teachers said the pupils at Emerson learned even more than last spring's testing indicated.

"The tests won't reflect the broad knowledge of current things the kids are picking up," Jack Farrow, a fourth-grade teacher, said.

"Some of these kids are street kids and came in knowing nothing more than the block they live on. But by the end of last year, they were voicing theories and opinions about broader things."

Wilson said the children at Emerson did not display the loss of information this fall that is normally shown after three months away from the classroom.

"It was because the kids continued reading the paper through the summer. They like the paper, and after being introduced to it last year, they refused to stop reading it."

The Consumer Protection Act protects YOU, the consumer

Cooling Off Period

Last fall I signed a contract in my home to have $3,700 worth of aluminum siding installed on my house. As a down payment I gave the salesman a cheque for $700. The next day I decided that I couldn't afford the job, so I telephoned the dealer to cancel the contract. That afternoon, the siding was dumped on my driveway. I immediately wrote the dealer a registered letter cancelling the contract, but haven't received my $700. Is there any way to get my deposit back?

Yes. The Consumer Protection Act allows for a cooling off period in which you can cancel a contract by registered mail or by letter personally delivered within two days after the contract has been signed. (The postmark is considered the delivery date.) A TELEPHONE CALL IS NO GOOD. This cooling off period applies only when the contract has been signed in a place other than the seller's place of business, for example, in your home; in this case, the dealer must return your $700, because you notified him correctly.

Unsolicited Goods

Last month I received three hardcover books by mail. I didn't request these books so I set them aside. Now, the company is billing me $35. I seem to have misplaced them and suspect they have been thrown out by mistake. Do I have to pay these people?

No, you don't. The Consumer Protection Act deals with unsolicited goods and credit cards. You are not responsible for any unsolicited goods delivered and you have no legal obligation as to their use or disposal, unless you know the goods are intended for another person. If unsolicited goods are sent to you, you can either keep the goods or throw them away.

Another tip – if you receive an unsolicited credit card you have no legal obligation as to its use or disposal unless you accept the card in writing or you use goods with it. In this case you are responsible for the goods purchased. But, if you don't want the card simply cut it up, and throw it out.

Contracts

I recently spent $880 on a home food plan which was supposed to supply me with meat and other food essentials for six months. The first of the six instalments of food couldn't have been worth more than $30. I checked with the seller and he said that the contract I'd signed called for only $233 worth of food. The balance, $647, included charges for administration, meat cutting, packaging, delivery and the salesman's commission. The contract stated a lump sum of $880 for goods and services. Is there any way I can get out of the deal?

In this case, the Consumer Protection Act protects you because the seller didn't itemize the cost of the goods and service charges involved. Because of this, the contract is void. The Act states that any executory contract of $50 or more has to include:

1. Name and address of both the seller and buyer.
2. Description of goods and services.
3. Itemized price of goods and terms of payment.
4. A statement of security if credit is involved.
5. A statement of warranty or guarantees, if any.
6. The signatures of both parties.

If a contract fails to include one of the above items, it is void. You should always read and understand every detail.

Gallery Charged

Paiffe said the exhibit included models of various parts of the human anatomy cut up and displayed in a meat freezer. They said they had received a number of complaints.

Isaacs said the week-old show will continue another week and termed the charges "absolutely ridiculous."

Turtles Spread Disease

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — The New Brunswick Supreme Court here ruled a Moncton department store must pay $5,701 to a woman who contracted a disease after having been given pet turtles bought in the store.

Anne McMullin bought the turtles for her children, Michael, 5, and Suzanne, 3, from the F. W. Woolworth Co. Ltd. on Aug. 8, 1968. The children then became ill with a "disease akin to typhoid fever" as a result of bacteria transmitted from the turtles, said a judgment written by Queen's Bench division Chief Justice A. J. Cormier.

Mrs. McMullin, who now resides at Naughton, Ont., also asked for damages for a "state of anxiety or nervous shock" she suffered because of the illness of her children.

But Chief Justice Cormier said Mrs. McMullin had not proved that her condition was one which the defendant ought to have foreseen, the usual test for such claims.

Waffle Sees Sellout

TORONTO (CP) — The labor committee of the Ontario Waffle Movement says the federal government's plan for a Sarnia-Montreal oil pipeline "is another step in the sellout of Canada's national interest to the giant American-owned oil companies."

In a statement Sunday, the committee said he Sarnia-Montreal extension of the present pipeline through United States territory would leave ultimate control of oil flows to eastern Canada in U.S. hands.

Belleville Bobcats' Mark Coates missed a golden opportunity to score on this attempt in the third period, but his reasons for not scoring were quite valid. Coates had skated down the left wing boards, cut across to the middle of the Toronto King City Red Wings' end and split the two Red Wing defencemen. Mark then moved in on Toronto goalie, Kevin Betts, but as he did the King City defenceman, Jeff Spencer (6) and Bill Milroy came back in on him. Spencer cross-checked Coates from the side, and Milroy hooked him from behind. Neither received penalties for their infractions. Coates didn't score in the game, but he did pick up a pair of assists as the Bobcats won 7-4.

Bobcats Shake Slump; Trip Red Wings

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Sports Staff

The victory, witnessed by some 400 spectators, had to be one of the poorest displays of hockey presented by two Metro Junior B teams this season.

Naturally, all the blame for the crudeness that was demonstrated by both teams throughout the contest does not rest with the Belleville club, but with the uninvited hockey talent that the Bobcats possess, such rough and unfinished styles, as were portrayed last night, should be alone their brand of play.

Several times this season, the Cats have shown the finesse and polish of a well seasoned hockey team, but of late the locals have deserted that part of the game is playing your position, something that has been forgotten lately. Against the Wings, last night, players were everywhere but where they should have been almost all the time. When Belleville players did find their positions and stayed in them for a few minutes it usually resulted in a goal. As a matter of fact, their last four goals were each the cases of good passing and positional hockey, but those only took a few minutes each to set up.

Despite the number of penalties in the first period, Belleville did manage to secure a 2-1 lead.

Norm Jones scored the first one for the locals half way through the period and Rob Foster added the second five minutes later.

The second period saw the two teams settle down in the penalty department with only three being assessed, one to Belleville. The pace of the game picked up in the second with the teams playing wide open hockey, which accounts for the number of mistakes made and the sloppy play.

Jeff Spencer and Wes Campbell replied for the Wings, bringing the score to 5-3 by the end of the second.

The teams traded tallies in the final 20 minutes, as Spencer scored his second of the night for Toronto and King got his second for the Bobcats, rounding the scoreboard out at 7-4 Belleville.

Only two penalties were handed out in the third period, but that there shouldn't have been more, bringing the total number of infraction calls to 19, seven of which were against the Cats.

Belleville's next game is at home t\'s Friday at 9 o'clock, when they play host to Peterborough.

Eagles 2 for 3 On the Weekend

The Belleville Eagles came up with their most successful weekend of hockey over the past three days, wnning two of three games and moving from 10 points out to just six away from the final playoff berth in the Ontario Hockey Association Senior A League.

Friday, the Eagles beat one of the top teams in the league Orillia 8-5, but went on the road Saturday and lost to Cambridge Hornets 9-4. The Eagles might have been put down Saturday but they were\'t going to stay down for long.

Sunday, Belleville travelled to Brantford where they upended the Farmers 6-3.

The Eagles' new executive and coach appear to have the locals where they wanted to play. The team went out of town for the pair of contests with the most complete lineup they've had since the beginning of the season.

Saturday, Ron Smith made the whole difference in Hornets' victory, scoring four of his team's nine goals. Pete Panagakko added two to the Cambridge effort and Gary Brewer, Brian Shortreed and John Beechey each scored once.

The game was a fast, clean one being played in just over two hours with only seven penalties being handed out, of which the Eagles had five.

Cambridge racked up a 4-1 lead by the end of the first period and made no qualms about showing they intended to stay there.

The Hornets got two more goals in each of the next two periods, while Belleville scored their next three in the third to take the 9-4 loss.

Charlie Convery was the key to the Eagles' victory Sunday as he fired a hat trick and added an assist. Wayne Weller the locals leading scorer picked up four assists on the six goals that were scored.

Belleville got a pair of markers less than 5 minute apart in the first period to open a 2-0 lead.

In the second period, the locals outscored the Foresters 3-2 to jump their lead to 5-2.

John McConnell tallied the first of the second period trio and Convery got the next two.

The two teams each got another goal in the third period as Convery picked up his third of the night for Belleville and John MacMillan scored for the Foresters.

Belleville outshot the home team 36-24 over the distance and only took four of the game's 11 penalties, one of which was a five minute major for fighting.

The Eagles next game is on the road again when the travel to Orillia on Saturday. They're home to Barrie Flyers, Sunday.

VETERAN PITCHER DIES

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Pete Appleton, a scout for Minnesota Twins who pitched for all eight American League teams of the 1930s and 1940s, died Saturday at Trenton, N.J., the Twins reported. Appleton, 69, pitched in the major leagues for 15 seasons, including a stint with Cincinnati Reds in the National League.

WINS SNOWMOBILE RACE

MAPLE RIVE, Wis. (AP) — Driver Gilles Villeneuve of Berthierville, Que., topped a field of 10 Sunday, driving his Alouette to victory in Eagle River's world championship snowmobile derby. Second in the 15-lap feature even on a half-mile oval was Hayes of Crandon, Wis. Jim Bernet of Rousseau, Minn., was third. Villeneuve won $2,100 of the $5,000 purse.

Western Tire Earns 3-3 Tie

PETERBOROUGH (Special) — Peterborough in the first half of the contest, Belleville Western Tire came back with a roar and were eight seconds away from a well earned victory here Sunday. But the Belleville crew had to settle for a 3-3 tie in the Ontario Minor Hockey Association Juvenile Triple A playoff series.

Goals by Paul Tilley and Jim Watkins gave Peterborough the early lead but the home team was able to build the lead to a more comfortable margin because of a solid display of goaltending by Belleville's Peter McQuaid.

Belleville put a scoreless second period, Western Tire went to work. Ken Hall combined with Jeff Brown to put the visitors on the scoreboard and Peter Crawford made it 2-2 afte taking a pass from Mike Watt.

That set the stage for overtime.

Crawford did the trick again in the extra session, scoring on a solo effort with his team killing a penalty.

But Sweeting's coloiter squared things again after it appeared Belleville had pulled it out.

The best of five series is all even. Each team has a win and a loss to go with Sunday's tie.

Sunday, January 27, the teams hook up in the fourth game of the series at Belleville Memorial Arena at 3 p.m.

Peterborough Teams Win 3

After taking their first win in league play last weekend, the McInroy-Maines Minor Bantams lost a pair of games to Peterborough this weekend.

Saturday, they lost 4-2, while Sunday they dropped an 8-4 decision.

Mike Sullivan and Danny Jacques were the only scorers Belleville could come up with on Saturday, while Sunday, Paul Slaughter shot a pair, while Bill MacLevan and Danny Duffy added singles.

The Belleville Minor Peewees also lost their only contest of the weekend to Peterborough, a 7-2 decision in the Littock City.

Greg Horwood and Danny Rose scored the only markers for the locals in the game.

Twenty-four races with a estimated value of $50,000 each are scheduled for the six A-tracks in the province — including 12 at Ontario Jockey Club tracks (Greenwood, Mohawk and Garden City).

ORC vice-chairman Max Webster called the $1.2 million program "a shot in the arm f o r agriculture, another means of farm livelihood. We'll have more up-to-date breeding farms, which are not now economically feasible.

The plan is also des igned to decrease the flow of money from Ontario to the United States for quality standardbreds. The province's horsemen currently spend more than $5 million a year at U.S. standardbred sales.

Two Bruins and a Sabre Come Out of the Shadows

By GERRY SUTTON
Canadian Press
Staff Writer

Ken Hodge, Carol Vadnais, Rick Martin — there's often overshadowed.

For instance, Hodge has likewise Phil Esposito, Vadnais by defensive competitor Bobby Orr, and Martin by Gil Perreault.

It was the reverse Sunday night in the National Hockey League as Hodge and Vadnais each scored two goals to lead Boston Bruins to a 5-2 triumph over Los Angeles Kings. They also had a goal apiece Saturday night as the Bruins whipped Montreal Canadiens 5-0.

Martin, a left winger who usually finds himself on a line with Perreault, had two goals and two assists Sunday in Buffalo Sabres' 6-4 win over California Seals.

Hodge, a right winger who scored 37 goals last season, now has 31 this year along with 39 assists for 63 points — good for third place in the points race. Vadnais, a 28-year-old defenseman in his second full season with the Bruins, got his eighth and ninth goals—two more than he had in 78 games in 1972-73.

Esposito, of course, still leads the scoring department with 41 goals and 45 assists for 86 points 14 ahead of Orr who has 21 goal and a league high of 53 assists.

In other Sunday games, Chicago Black Hawks defeated Vancouver Canucks 7-2; the Canadiens shaded Detroit Red Wings 3-2; Pittsburgh Penguins stymied Philadelphia Flyers 5-3, and St. Louis Blues beat Atlanta Flames 3-1.

The results left Boston in first place in the East Division with 64 points, six more than Montreal and 12 ahead of New York Rangers. Pittsburgh Leafs have 50 points, followed by Buffalo with 49, Detroit, 46, New York Islanders 32 and Vancouver 27.

Philadelphia still leads the West Division with 59 points, five ahead of Chicago. St. Louis has 46 points, Atlanta 43, Minnesota North Stars 39, Los Angeles 37, Pittsburgh 31 and California 24.

In other Saturday games, the angers nipped New York Rangers the North Stars beat the Leafs 5-3; the Wings topped the Blues 5-2; the Flyers blanked the Kings 3-0; and the Islanders tie the Sabres 3-3.

Bruins 5 Kings 2

The Bruins, who outshot the Kings 34-31, increased their home record to 20 wins, one defeat and two ties. The score was tied 1-1 on Orr's goal and one by Mike Corrigan before Vadnais beat goalie Rogie Vachon at 12:45 of the first period.

The Bruins added another goal in the first period and two more in the second for a 5-1 lead.

Sabres 6 Seals 4

Martin's second goal of the N. Falls game at 7:48 of the third period snapped a 4-4 tie and gave the Sabres their 22nd win in 45 games. Martin, who scored 44 goals in his rookie season and 37 last year, fired a 50-foot shot past goalie Gilles Meloche after taking a pass from Perreault, who wound up with three assists.

Martin is fourth in the scoring race with 59 points, including 33 goals.

Hawks 7 Canucks 2

The Canucks went to Chicago without regular goalie Gary Smith. The Hawks took little sympathy, firing 40 shots at Jacques Caron, who started the game, and Ed Dyck.

Smith, who has appeared in 27 games this season, informed at 5:02 of the third period, Dyck stopped 12 shots in an outstanding performance.

"We should have had at least six goals against him," said Chicago coach Billy Reay.

"Either he's real good or we made him look that good."

Jim Pappin, who also had two assists, and rookie Darcy Rota paced the Hawks with two goals each.

Canadiens 3 Wings 2

The Canadiens started the game without Yvan Cournoyer, who had a bruised groin and hamstring pull in his right leg, and Jacques Lemaire, with a bruised right knee; and later lost Chuck Lefley, with a bruised hip and Jacques Laperriere, with a twisted knee.

Cournoyer is expected to be sidelined for several games.

Murray Wilson's goal, his ninth of the season, at 6:07 of the third period broke a 2-2 draw and gave the Canadiens the win. It was Wilson's fifth game-winner.

Penguins 5 Flyers 3

The Penguins scored two goals in the first period and three in the third to snap a 10-game winless streak against the Flyers, who had won eight in a row at home.

Flames 3 Blues 1

Glen Sather and Don Awgutti both scored their 12th goals of the year to give the Blues a 2-0 lead entering the final period. Warren Williams increased the margin late in the period before Jacques Richard spoiled goalie Gilles Davidson's shutout with one minute and 22 seconds remaining.

St. Louis outshot Atlanta 39-29.

Canadians Hot On Home Ice

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

An hour apparently made the difference for Kingston Canadians Sunday night.

Their scheduled Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior 'A' game against Toronto Marlboros was delayed when weather conditions held up the start of the 7:30 p.m. game.

So while the Marlboros spent most of the hour still inching their way on ice-covered roads from Toronto, the Canadians took an elongated pre-game warmup and laser put it to good use.

Toronto had hardly unwound from its extra-long bus ride before Kingston scored four unanswered goals in the first period en route to a 5-2 victory over the Marlboros.

Eric Brubacher scored two goals for the Canadians, who stretched their unbeaten streak on home ice to nine victories and a tie in their last 10 games.

Kingston outshot Toronto 34-33 and took two of five minor penalties called in the game.

In other series games Sunday St. Catharines Black Hawks beat Sault Ste. Marie Greyhounds 7-3, London Knights trimmed Hamilton Red Wings 6-1, and Kitchener Rangers stopped Ottawa 67s 4-1.

Saturday, Peterborough Petes defeated the Greyhounds 6-3 and Oshawa Generals downed Sudbury Wolves 6-4.

Chair Tossing Doesn't Help

Harry Neale won the chair tossing contest during Sunday night's World Hockey Association game in Quebec City and it is likely the coach of Minnesota Fighting Saints will be fined for his efforts.

Neale hurled a wooden chair across the ice late in the first period, shortly after Pierre Guite's first of two goals gave Quebec Nordiques a 2-1 lead. Neale was ejected from the game by referee Pierre Belanger and his team lost 5-4 to the Nordiques on an overtime power-play goal by Serge Bernier.

In other WHA play, Toronto Toros thrashed New England Whalers 8-1, Winnipeg Jets hammered New Jersey Knights 9-3, Edmonton Oilers clipped Cleveland Crusaders 5-3 and Vancouver Blazers whitewashed Los Angeles Sharks 3-0.

Nordiques 5 Salata 4

The first-period controversy began when Guite shot from the side of the net. The goal judge flashed the light but quickly flicked it off.

Then referee Belanger ruled no goal. But Quebec teammate Alain Beaule charged after the referee, who then changed his decision.

The players are intimidating the referees," said Neale who agreed that he deserved to be tossed out of the game. "I did a childish thing."

The Nordiques held a 4-1 lead at one stage on two goals by Guite and singles by Alain Caron and Guy Dufour. But the Fighting Saints came back and Billy Klatt's second goal of the game at 8:35 of the third period forced the overtime.

Toros 8 Whalers 1

Centre Wayne Carleton's 29th and 27th goals of the season helped the Toros down New England.

Toronto now has 36 points in 45 games and trail the first-place Whalers by two points in the battle for the top spot in the WHA's East. The Whalers have four games in hand.

Tom Martin and Pat Hickey also had a pair of goals for the Toros with Bob Leiter and Wayne Dillon adding singles. Tim Sheehy, Rick Ley, Al Karlander and John French scored for the Whalers.

Playing coach Bobby Hull brought his season's goal output to 33 by scoring three goals and Fran Huck collected five assists to lead the Jets.

The Jets are two points behind front-running Houston Aeros but the Aeros have seven games in hand.

Oilers 5 Crusaders 2

Team captain Al Hamilton turned in his first two-goal game in six years to lead the Oilers.

Hamilton's goals, which came in the second period, erased a 1-0 Cleveland lead and started the Oilers to their 18th win in 22 games on home ice this season.

Blazers 3 Sharks 0

Goalie Peter Donnelly blocked 29 shots as the Blazers downed Los Angeles. Claude St. Sauveur, Don Burgess and Mike Chernoff were the Vancouver marksmen.

Play resumes Tuesday with Vancouver at Edmonton, Los Angeles in Houston and Chicago Cougars at home to New England.

After Third Win, Miller Will Rest

He plans to take some time off and so, for the first time this year, somebody else will win a tournament.

Miller, a skinny, blonde 26-year-old, scored a record-breaking third consecutive victory Sunday in the $150,000 Tucson Open golf tournament and reluctantly decided to skip this week's San Diego Open.

"With this cold and sore throat I have, if I don't take some time off, I'm crumbin' for a month. I'm committed for six weeks in a row starting in Hawaii.

"If I played another tournament . . . I'd do one of two things: I'd get pneumonia or my game would go bad."

He held off Ben Crenshaw's challenge with a final-round 68, four under par on the 7,305-yard Tucson National Golf Club course, and won by three strokes with a 16-under-par total of 276. He has broken par in every competitive round he's played this season.

Miller, unbeaten this year, is the only man ever to sweep the first three tournaments of the season and is the first since Arnold Palmer in 1963 to win any three consecutive events.

"Four in a row would be nice," said Miller, who leaped to recognition with his record victory in the United States last summer. "But, like they say, if you don't have your health you don't have anything."

Miller won the weather-plagued Bing Crosby tournament, followed that with a triumph at Phoenix and led all the way in this one.

For the third day in a row Miller faltered down the stretch. He had a four-stroke lead after 15 holes of the final round, bogeyed the next two holes and didn't really clinch it until Crenshaw three-putted for bogey on the last hole.

CRENSHAW HAS 69

The 23-year-old Crenshaw had a final-round 69 for 275. J. C. Snead, 70, and Jerry Heard, 69, finished at 278.

"I was lucky," Miller said. "I got off to that great start, making birdie on the first three holes. If I'd gone par-par-par you can bet your bottom dollar I wouldn't have won.

"I felt I was fighting an uphill battle. I didn't think I could handle the tension."

But he did, pulling down a $30,000 first prize and pushing his winnings to $80,000 in only three weeks. With his victory in the World Cup competition in Spain and his last 1973 start, Miller now has won his last four tournaments.

Bulls Shade Portland

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jerry Sloan's last-second shot enabled Chicago Bulls to take a 99-97 National Basketball Association victory Sunday over Portland Trail Blazers.

The Bulls, who had lost five of their last six games plus coach Dick Motta, sitting out the second game of a three-game suspension for a run-in with several referees, saw their 16-point lead melt into a 97-97 tie when Larry Steele sank a 20-footer for Portland with 18 seconds left.

Pistons 105 Kings 79

76ers 129 Braves 112

Bob McAdoo collected 38 points and Don May added 28 as Philadelphia coasted to victory.

Bullets 111 Rockets 105

Warriors 123 Celtics 102

Bucks 94 Lakers 90

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar soared to a season-high 39 points for the Bucks, who earned their fifth straight victory while snapping the Lakers' three-game winning streak.

Saturday's NBA scores: Milwaukee 121, Portland 106; Atlanta 127, Seattle 109; Capital 117, Golden State 90; K.C.-Omaha 111, Cleveland 108; Phoenix 112, New York 86.

Yepremian Puts Boot To National Conference

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Garo Yepremian, a native of Cyprus who didn't go to college, may have the most educated foot in the National Football League.

For four years the little guy helped Miami Dolphins, National Football League champions, be victory after victory. Yepremian's foot did it again Sunday, except this time it was for the American Conference.

His five field goals, the winning one a 42-yarder with 21 seconds remaining, set a Pro Bowl record and gave the AFC a 15-13 triumph over the National Conference in a game that had 12 first-half turnovers.

There were 15 fumbles, eight recovered, and four intercepted passes.

Prior to his game-decider, Yepremian booked field goals of 16, 37, 27 and 41 yards. He broke the record of four kicked in 1972 by Kansas City's Jan Stenerud.

With his left foot plunged into ice, Yepremian said afterward: "I had to come through for the rest of the guys. The money did not mean anything. Most of the players on the winners get goes for taxes anyway."

Yepremian helped from the field after a nullified 22-yard field goal in the third quarter when he was hit by Larry Benfro of Dallas Cowboys, was voted the game's most valuable player. After an offside penalty erased that kick, Yepremian rebounded and made good on the 27-yarder.

Nick Mike-Mayer of Atlanta Falcons had given the NFC, loser of three consecutive Pro Bowl games, a 13-12 advantage with 1:41 to go with a 21-yard field goal.

Mike-Mayer after Yepremian staked the AFC to a 3-0 first-quarter lead, deadlocked the game in the second quarter with a 37-yarder.

The NFC added the contest's lone touchdown before the half ended, Roman Gabriel of Philadelphia Eagles throwing a 14-yard strike to Larry McCutcheon of Los Angeles Rams. The NFC led at the half 10-6.

The touchdown came on the first play after Ken Houston of Washington Redskins' interception a pass thrown by Ken Stabler of Oakland Raiders and returned it six yards.

Stabler, who quarterbacked the AFC the entire first half, had a miserable afternoon. He threw four interceptions, completed only two of 15 passes for 19 yards. The NFC's four thefts broke the old mark of three set by the AFC in 1972.

Bob Griese, Miami's quarterback, received a wild ovation from the crowd of 51,494 when he took over at the start of the second half.

Griese found targets on seven of 15 attempts for 96 yards.

Mary Hubbard of the Raiders rushed for 106 yards on 17 carries, and O. J. Simpson of Buffalo Bills had 76 yards on 19 tries. Simpson set an NFL single-season record of 2,003 yards in 1973.

Event a Sellout, Billie Jean Happy

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The crowds were half the story at the $50,000 San Francisco tennis tournament, won by Billie Jean King.

"I've waited 20 years to see crowds like this," Mrs. King said before her 7-6 6-2 championship victory over Chris Evert Saturday night. "It's all too beautiful."

The tournament, the opening event of the women's pro tour, drew sellout crowds of 6,500 the last two nights.

Mrs. King received $10,000 and said: "I hate to tell you, but four years ago that was the size of our whole purse for most tournaments."

The 31-year-old champion, who learned the game on public park courts in Long Beach, Calif., has ridden the tennis boom to fame and financial success, but she seemed genuinely surprised by the overwhelming success of the event here.

"I can't tell you how much this means to us," she told the crowd.

Mrs. King rolled to her Saturday night victory after losing the first two points of the tie-breaker 13th game of the first set. A strong return of a lob shot helped her win the third point and she went on to take the game, 8 game to 2.

The single finalists later teamed to win the doubles crown and $3,200, beating Francoise Durr of France and Betty Stove of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-2.

Shifty Forward Leads Americans

When Rochester Americans and their shifty forward Murray Kunts bit top stride in unison it's a combination hard to beat in the American Hockey League.

The Americans earned three points on the weekend and their 4-3 victory over Hershey Bears, Southern Division leaders, was their eighth in a row on home ice. They tied Boston Braves 3-3 Saturday.

Kuntz, a native of Ottawa, scored in his eighth straight game, one short of an AHL record, and his 33rd goal gave him 12 in his last eight games. Last season he scored 15 goals and had 30 assists for Cincinnati Swords.

The Americans remained five points behind New Haven Nighthawks however, as the leaders of the North Division defeated Baltimore Clippers 5-3.

In other games Sunday, Jacksonville Barons beat Richmond Robins 7-3, the Swords blanked Nova Scotia Voyageurs 3-0, Providence Reds belted the Braves 11-4 and Virginia Red Wings defeated Springfield Kings 4-2.

In Saturday's other games it was Springfield 3-2 over Providence, and Baltimore 6-3 over Hershey.

Russ Butler, Barry Merrell and Rick Pagnutti were other goal-getters for Rochester, while Dennis Owchar, Don Sedgwick and Steve Andruscik connected for Hershey before 7,344 fans at Rochester.

Jean Landry, Frank Richardson and Jim Nicholls scored for Cincinnati in a goal-a-period clip to beat the Voyageurs. Barry Bromley was in goal for the shutout. In two previous meetings this year the Swords, Gadsby Cup defending champions, lost 9-1 and 4-2 to Nova Scotia.

Goals by Terry Holbrook and Dave Lee two minutes apart in the third period clinched New Haven's victory over Baltimore. Alain Langlais, Dennis Patterson and Don Thompson provided the other markers. Scoring for the Clippers were Brian Murray and Bob Cook.

Rick Newell, Robbie Florek, Blair Stewart and Mike Jakubo scored for Virginia, with Jakubo's goal fired into an empty net. Springfield snipers were Doug Volmar and Vic Venasky.

The third-place Providence Reds was in high gear against the Braves. Andre Peloffy, Pierre Lagacken and Al Blanchard each contributed a pair of goals for the winners. Gerry Teeple, Paul Gaetano, Bert Wilson and Doug Horbul got single markers. Bob Gryp connected twice while Rich Leduc and Steve Stirling managed one goal each for Boston.

Rookie Lou Nistico was a two-goal man for the Barons against Joe Robert, Brad Berlow, John Cunniff, Jeff Jacquin, Ed Hoekstra and Rich Pumple got one each. Hoekstra and Pumple connected on power-plays. Serge Lajeunesse, Larry Wright and Danny Schock were the Richmond snipers.

Single Market For Domestic Oil Favored

OTTAWA (CP) — One major issue connected with the national energy conference opening here Tuesday may be solved by consensus before the 11 first ministers get together.

Although the details may provide grounds for argument, several governments leaders—including Prime Minister Trudeau and New Democratic Leader David Lewis favor a single national market for domestic crude oil with a single basic domestic price.

Mr. Trudeau made this clear Sunday at the semi-annual meeting of Quebec federal Liberals in Montreal.

He said the federal government must take a firm attitude toward the west in order to defend the east" regarding petroleum pricing, but the government also must protect western interests.

In Toronto, meanwhile, Mr. Lewis said Sunday, after a two-day closed-door meeting of the federal NDP council, that his party also supports the one-price concept.

He went a step further, though, in calling again for an all-Canadian reversible pipeline through Northern Ontario to Eastern Canada from the west and urging elimination of Canadian petroleum exports to the United States by 1980, the year President Nixon wants the U.S. to become self-sufficient in energy.

The one-price, single-market concept also has drawn general approval from eastern and western premiers.

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta and Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan, the two major producing provinces, both want a major say in how the single price is determined.

Mr. Trudeau told a fund-raising dinner in Montreal Sunday this week's conference will go beyond energy in its importance, touching a fact on "the kind of life we are going to have" in Canada.

To get the conference started here, federal officials have an advance briefing on federal positions scheduled for today and Mr. Blakeney has scheduled an afternoon news conference.

Other premiers also could schedule news conferences in advance of the two-day, nationally-televised conference, but one who will not is Premier Lougheed.

Ever since last week, when he talked with Mr. Trudeau for 75 minutes, Mr. Lougheed said he will remain quiet until the conference opens Tuesday.

In a weekend television interview, Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said the price of petroleum will outweigh the supply of petroleum as the main conference debating issue.

Recent developments have combined to ease fears of winter shortages in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, he said, and five eastern provinces rely on overseas oil to supply their needs.

Mr. Macdonald said milder weather, more normal, the prospect of a more stable Middle East political climate, and the movement of larger-than-expected volumes of crude from Western Canada to eastern markets have brightened the picture considerably.

"It looks very happily as though the worst may not happen. However, he said, unusually severe weather or a setback in the Middle East could turn the situation around.

The conference will focus on three key questions. The long-range price of domestically-produced oil, the use of money raised by the federal export tax on crude oil, and establishment of a national program to reduce the impact of rising petroleum prices in Eastern Canada.

Alberta and Saskatchewan, as the producing provinces, want a higher price for oil, currently frozen at about $4 a barrel by a federal-provincial-industry agreement reached in September. The figure is about one-third current international rates.

Ottawa has said it is willing to let domestic prices rise enough to ensure continued oil exploration and development of new energy sources.

But it wants to shield consumers as much as possible from high petroleum prices. The top-producing provinces argue that they are entitled to prices comparable with international rates.

Lougheed Chooses Silent

OTTAWA (CP) — The oncesangry words of Premier Peter Lougheed have turned to near-silence in public.

Most other provincial leaders have made speeches, held news conference or granted interviews as they prepared for the energy conference starting here Tuesday.

Mr. Lougheed, whose government is trying to control the price of oil the other provinces want, says Alberta's position already has been made clear.

An Alberta spokesman said Sunday the premier plans to remain incommunicado as he and his staff prepare for the conference. No statements would be issued until the meeting starts.

The premier met with Prime Minister Trudeau for 75 minutes Thursday. No agreements were reached, Mr. Lougheed said.

Neither he nor other Alberta delegates have met federal leaders or officials since then, the spokesman said. No additional meetings are planned.

Other southern provinces, all of them NDP, elaborated on their positions in the days before the conference.

Premier Ed Schreyer of Manitoba announced general support for Ottawa policies, adding that some of the return from oil exports should be used to foster industrial development in Western Canada.

In British Columbia, minority-Premier Alex Macdonald said Premier Dave Barrett is extremely concerned about binding up the "wounds of Confederation" created by the energy dispute. Mr. Barrett supports the federal export tax on crude oil.

Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan has been the topmost vocal NDP speaking tour of Eastern Canada last week.

He said Premier Peter Lougheed that control of oil belongs to the government called for a national pricing policy.

The policy would involve higher domestic prices for oil—they would be lower than international levels—and a subsidy for those parts of Eastern Canada dependent on foreign oil.

NDP Oil Policy Opposes Exports

TORONTO (CP) — The governing body of the New Democratic Party has hammered out a tough national oil policy that recommends eliminating oil exports to the United States by 1980.

The 129-member NDP federal council met in a closed-door session Saturday and Sunday to discuss energy, party administration and election plans.

The new policy-basically an expansion of policy adopted at last July's party convention-calls for aid to consumers in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces because of their dependence on imported oil, the construction of an all-Canadian oil pipeline from Western Canada through Northern Ontario to the east and public control over the oil industry.

Mr. Lewis emphasized that his party continues to believe in a one-price system for oil and petroleum products.

However, he said the price to Canadian consumers should be established by agreement between the federal government and the provinces and should remain below world price levels.

Mr. Lewis was questioned on Saskatchewan NDP Premier Allan Blakeney's plan to increase the provincial oil royalty surcharge to $5 a barrel from 30 cents.

The federal leader said he could find nothing wrong in a province boosting royalties when the benefits would accrue to the people of the province.

However, he was quick to point out that Alberta, unlike Saskatchewan, would be helping the multi-national oil corporations with its proposed increases in oil royalties.

Mr. Lewis said "a large part of this windfall gain will go to the oil companies."

Brantford Display Bell Canada Plans

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — Bell Canada plans to erect a $125,000 display of telecommunications equipment here this spring to celebrate the centennial of the invention of the telephone here by Alexander Graham Bell.

The company said the display, called Telescience 100, will be housed in a geodesic dome and will open in May.

Meanwhile, Arthur J. Kelly of Brantford, a movie producer-and-playwright, said he will stage a parade 23 blocks long leading with 100 floats.

He did not say when the event—entitled Thank You, Mr. Bell—would take place.

He added that he also plans to have an art show open to professional and amateur artists who may submit any fine crafts.

"The only criterion is that it must be related to the telephone."

Old Power Game On Once Again

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

OTTAWA — The longest-running game in the country is on again.

The federal government and the provinces have been around a table off and on since before Confederation.

And always the main point of their game has been power.

While all the players have been agreeable to nationalism and a united community of Canada they also have had the very human desire for as much authority as possible in their own bailiwick.

And underlying much of the bargaining that has gone on for years and years has been this goal of power.

In this week's energy conference the stakes are perhaps higher than they have been since the federal government grabbed provincial rights to income tax during the war and then wouldn't give them back.

For unlike some conferences, which are on the constitution and similar blurred matters, there is real money in the pot this time.

The money being the gut issue of just what right a province has to its natural resources.

No matter how far the conference roams—and being called to discuss, in broad terms, "energy" it has lots of room to wander—the great immediate concern is going to be Alberta and Saskatchewan's oil resources and just what rights they have over them.

As this stage it appears as though the federal government is bound to win a gain on this round.

Before the conference ends two main points of argument are expected to be that there be a uniform price for gasoline and fuel oil across Canada (allowing for differences in transportation costs), that our present oil supplies be kept in Canada and not be sold outside its borders (this would be to protect reserves) and possibly also that there be national control of well-head prices, which at present are under the control of the provinces and have been exercised in the case of oil.

These goals may not all be achieved, but certainly some of them will; for the other provinces, all of which are gas and oil hungry, will tend to be on the side of the feds rather than their brethren, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

It means for one thing, that at least in part each of the two western provinces will take it in the neck.

But it also probably means a further gain in the power struggle for Ottawa.

West, Not Ontario, Holds High Cards

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — Ontario will be holding a comparatively weak hand at the opening round of this week's federal-provincial conference on energy.

It won't be going in loaded with aces as it usually does at Dome conferences (though the federal government, of course, always has that).

Most of the conferences to date have mainly been skirmishes around money or the constitution and as both the wealthiest and the largest jurisdiction Ontario has been at the top of the pile of the provinces.

At the top at this conference will be Alberta and Saskatchewan.

For though the conference is called "energy" the gist of it will be oil and gasoline.

And here Alberta and Saskatchewan hold the cards. They are the two provinces that have the oil.

The other provinces, and even the federal government to some extent, will be out there where they will have to do a bit of bargaining if they want fuel going.

The immediate goal at the conference of Ontario and most of the other provinces, and probably of the federal government, will be to get control systems which will hold down prices, give Canadians gasoline and fuel oil at a cheaper price than the U.S. and other countries and maintain a fairly uniform price across the country.

This would mean a sacrifice for Alberta and Saskatchewan which if they were completely on their own, and they aren't, of course, because under the ENA Act the federal government controls exports, they could become Arabian rich.

Both provinces have expressed good intentions to the extent they have endorsed the principle of a single market.

But both also can be expected to show self-interest and to be looking for something in return.

This is where Ontario is in a weak position. It has practically nothing to bargain with.

There is no surplus energy it can throw into the pool to go along with the guidelines for oil and gas its government has there is a possible slight excess of electricity, but it is relatively puny.

And the only card there is an ace, is under semi-federal control.

As the conference develops it could arrive at positions where Ontario moves off show, but at the opening, probably for the first couple of days of the conference, Ontario starts out as an underdog.

Trudeau Believes Parley Crucial

MONTREAL (CP) — The federal-provincial energy conference Tuesday will be crucial for Canadian federalism, Prime Minister Trudeau said Sunday night.

The energy situation in Canada "is one of the greatest crises this country has ever had to meet."

The prime minister said the provinces cannot demand that Ottawa keep its hands off resources—a provincial responsibility—while asking at the same time for subsidies to offset rising fuel costs.

Mr. Trudeau told the semi-annual convention of the federal Liberal party's Quebec wing that federal policy is to have a single petroleum market in Canada with a single price throughout the country. The price would be below the world price.

He also said the National Energy Board is a federal government instrument for balancing energy resources of various types in various parts of the country.

"The basic approach is that we will not allow export of energy that is not in excess of our needs."

During a question-and-answer session a delegate told Mr. Trudeau: "You must take a firm attitude toward the west in order to defend the east."

"We have no problem agreeing with that," the prime minister replied. But the federal government must protect western interests too.

Several delegates asked questions on energy Saturday that indicated they believe the west is being favored by the federal government at the expense of the east.

Cabinet ministers on the platform denied this, but Jean Chretien, northern affairs minister, said the "nationalist aspirations of provinces like Alberta" must be resisted.

Alastair Gillespie, industry and commerce minister, warned that transport costs and different provincial—taxation rates will cause prices of oil products to vary across the country even under a one-market system.

Sherbrooke Will Offer College for Elderly

TOULOUSE, France (CP) — The University of Toulouse offers the first study program for retired people. The University of Sherbrooke in Quebec will soon begin the second and other universities appear ready to follow.

Pierre Vellas, professor of law and economic sciences at Toulouse, said he is happy that Sherbrooke will offer courses to students aged 65 and up so he can share information and compare results of a concept which should play a vital role in the future.

"If the problems of youth profoundly marked the 1960s, then the problems of the elderly must preoccupy public confidencieurs in the 1970s," he said in an interview.

In France, for example, there are expected to be eight million people 65 or older by 1980. There were only 3.2 million in 1900.

Such longevity means loneliness for most retired people because when the job is over, so is the normal social life associated with it, Mr. Vellas said.

Only 24 per cent of retired people live with their families, and this number is expected to decrease because of the problems of housing and caring for old people.

Of those who enter homes for the elderly, 28.7 per cent die in the first month of their arrival and 54.4 per cent within the first year. Twenty per cent receive no visitors.

The University Toulouse goal is to contribute to these peoples' lives, he said, and act a measure of its success nearly 1,000 people have taken advantage of the year-round program.

During the November-to-May session, the retired people attend weekly film clubs and exercise classes and go on organized tours of the region, France and other countries.

Mr. Vellas complained that insufficient funds prevented him from being innovative.

Back to School

A lecture room at the University of Toulouse, France, is crowded with retired people attending a study program for senior citizens. The program is the first offered anywhere for elderly people, but the University of Sherbrooke, Que., is expected to begin a similar program shortly. Nearly 1,000 people have taken advantage of the year-round program at Toulouse. (CP Photo)

GOLD STRUCK

Goldenville, N.S., was named after a girl who stumbled over a piece of quartz while picking flowers in 1863, causing a minor gold rush.

UN Prestige Enhanced By Middle East Action

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — The UN emerged from its 1973 session with its prestige as keeper of the world's peace enhanced by decisive action to bring the new Middle East war to a halt.

The 17-day war between Israel and Egypt and Syria ended in a stand-off ceasefire on Oct. 25 after the issuance of the second of two Security Council resolutions calling for an end to the fighting. In a rare display of unanimity, the United States and Russia cosponsored the ceasefire resolutions.

The council then proceeded to set up a 7,000-man UN emergency force to serve as a buffer between the Israeli and Egyptian armies. Canada, with a long history of service in UN peacekeeping operations, was asked to share support duties with Poland and provided a 1,000-man contingent.

The fact the superpowers, supported by the middle powers, acted to end the fighting and establish a peace force was regarded as a plus for UN prestige and tended to erase the blemish suffered in the 1956 war when the original UN force was withdrawn from the Israeli area at the insistence of the Egyptian army.

Equally significant was the decision of the Soviet Union and Communist East Bloc allies to share the cost of the new operation. The Russians refused to contribute to the cost of the original force.

But, on the diplomatic front, UN achievements were less impressive and there was disappointment at the relatively minor role assigned to the world organization at the Geneva peace conference, with Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim presiding at the opening ceremonies and then stepping aside to allow the U.S. and Russia to take over as chairmen.

At the behest of the Arab countries, the three-month session of the General Assembly was recessed Dec. 18, rather than adjourned, to make it easier to reconvene the assembly should Middle East developments warrant. A recess means the assembly could be called back without polling the full UN membership.

The session saw the development of a new cohesiveness among Arab, African and other non-aligned or third world countries on a variety of issues, including the Middle East war. Generally, the African and non-aligned blocs favored the Arab cause.

The assembly scored a major achievement with the admission to membership of East and West Germany and the Bahamas, raising the UN roster to 135 nations from a founding membership of 51 in 1946.

The assembly also voted to convene a world conference in Rome next November to find ways to deal with threatened world food shortages.

Of major significance for Canada was the assembly's action in voting funds for preparations for the UN conference on human settlements to be held in Vancouver in 1976.

In an address before the UN, Urban Affairs Minister Ron Basford of Canada expressed hope the Vancouver conference, which will include exhibits of solutions to human settlements problems now in operation around the world, will produce a solid international commitment to protect and improve mankind's mode of living.

Dead Performer's Song Nominated

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nominations for the music industry's Grammy awards were disclosed Thursday, and many of the songs nominated for record of the year was one by singer Jim Croce, who died in an airplane crash.

The nomination for the song Bad, Bad Leroy Brown was one of the rare posthumous nominations made in the 16 years of awards by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

The other nominees for record of the year, announced by singer Andy Williams in a news conference at the Hollywood Palladium, were Behind Closed Doors, performed by Charlie Rich; Killing Me Softly with His Song, sung by Roberta Flack; You are the Sunshine of My Life, written and sung by Stevie Wonder, and You're So Vain, written and sung by Carly Simon.

Miss Flack, Wonder and Rich figured in several other categories of nominations, including album of the year, in which the nominees were Behind Closed Doors by Rich; The Divine Miss M, by Bette Midler; Innervisions, by Wonder; Killing Me Softly with His Song, by Miss Flack, and There Goes Rhymin' Simon, by Paul Simon.

The winners for 1973 will be announced on a television special program scheduled for March 2.

Showbiz Shorts

The 65-year-old Wayne is in London to promote his latest film, McQ, in which he trades in his Colt .45 and saddle for an automatic pistol and a police car.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Since he appeared in the film, One, Two, Three 12 years ago, James Cagney has been raising cattle in Dutchess County, N.Y.

But he emerges from show business retirement March 18 as part of a tribute to him on a CBS television special hosted by Frank Sinatra.

The 71-year-old actor said he's also writing an autobiography.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police issued an all-points bulletin Thursday for comedian Sandy Baron, who was reported by his manager to have disappeared after suffering a bout of depression.

"No one has yet seen him," said Walter Scott, the manager who filed a missing-persons report when Baron did not arrive Monday at rehearsals for a show in San Diego.

Baron, 37, is scheduled to open Jan. 23 in the play Lenny in which he portrays the controversial late comedian Lenny Bruce.

Scott said Baron had been depressed for about eight months about the disintegration of his second marriage.

Exorcist Can Drive You Crazy

CHICAGO (Reuter) — People have entered hospitals for mental treatment after seeing the film The Exorcist, a Chicago psychiatrist, Dr. Louis Schlan, said Friday.

Dr. Schlan said he was treating two people who had seen the film. He told reporters:

"Several people have become clinically ill—unable to function adequately in their usual capacity—some to the point of requiring hospitalization after seeing the film."

The Exorcist, which is playing to packed houses, is a detailed study of a 12-year-old girl possessed by the devil. People watching the film have been sick or have fainted and others have had to leave the theatre during the performance.

Dr. Schlan said his patients were responding to treatment. He added that he has no doubt their trouble was caused by the impact of the film.

A theatre manager said many of the people who see the film want to be scared and also want to know whether they are stronger than those who walk out of the movie halfway through the showing.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Tuesday, Jan. 22

Aries (March 21-April 19) You will be put on the spot. Those you're closely involved with will suddenly change their minds and leave you without allies.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) Today, where work or career is concerned, there will be more confusion than usual. You're likely to be right in the middle.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) In an important situation where you share an interest neither party is thinking too clearly. Things things up immediately.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) Don't let your male or partner act on your behalf without your consent or full understanding of what you may be getting involved in.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) If you let concentration wander from your work today mistakes will result. Take your time. You'll better off being slow, but sure.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This is not the time to involve yourself in any situation that smacks of speculation. Turn a deaf ear to such proposals.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Things that you should be doing will be left undone today. You'll be looking for ways to escape basic responsibilities.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be careful. Don't form opinions based upon limited or faulty information. Allow yourself ample time to think matters through.

Sagittarius (Nov 23-Dec. 21) Be wary of a friend who has unusual advice regarding ways to improve your financial position. It's best to ignore his counsel.

Capricorn (Dec 22-Jan. 19) You won't be as sharp a business person today as you will tomorrow. Bear this in mind if you have important commercial dealings.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Love is on your thoughts to yourself. You could say something you'll later regret to one you're involved with on an important matter.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) A friend is miffed at a pal of yours and is involved to some e h i n d-the-scenes activity. Don't let him drag you into the mess.

To Your Good Health

Many People Have Coated Tongues

By G.C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My tongue is always coated. I use baking soda but the coating is always present. Is there something besides soda I could use? It is embarrassing, and I still cannot determine the cause. Please advise.—M.M.C.

Why be embarrassed about your coated tongue? Who's going to see it except you and your doctor?

Anyway, the coating is not serious, nor is it, usually, an indication of any sort of health problem. Something like one out of every five people you know has a coated tongue too. They don't worry about it and they aren't ill.

But if you are determined to do something about it, rather than using baking soda, just scrape your tongue gently with your tooth brush. This may not eliminate the coating, but will reduce it.

The tongue's surface is made up of many papillae, or tiny columns. Bits of food, or fungi, or such matter can become trapped between the papillae, and that's what gives the appearance of coating.

This tendency varies somewhat from person to person. Cigarette smokers and mouth breathers tend to have coated tongues. So can patients with a fever, the coating resulting from dehydration. But for the most part the act of chewing tends to keep the tongue reasonably "clean."

Worrying about a "coated tongue" is a hangover from the past. Mothers used to tell their youngsters to "stick out your tongue" when they felt ill, and if the tongue was coated, that was taken as a sign of illness. Since (as I said) coating can go along with a fever, or with mouth breathing which is common enough with a cold, there was some apparent reason in connecting a coated tongue with illness.

But it was only apparent—not significant. The commonly accepted notion that it is a sign of constipation, or digestive disorders just hasn't proved to be true.

Of course a doctor may take a look at your tongue in the course of a medical checkup—but he isn't looking for a "coated tongue." Rather, he may want to see whether an unusually bright red tongue may be a hint of pernicious anemia or some such ailment. Even then it's no more than a hint, and he will use more specific tests to make sure.

In most cases, he's more interested in looking at your throat than at your tongue.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Please write about curing hives. Every night I wake about 3 a.m. and find my eyes and lips puffed up and swollen. My legs and body also break out.—O.B.G.

Most likely answer is that, since the attacks come at that time of night, they are the result of some sort of allergy. Could be such things as feathers or other material in your pillows, or wool or something in the bed clothes or night clothes? Or if you take a bath at night, something in the soap may cause such a reaction.

But it would seem to be a far-out one to enter the picture only after, or shortly before, you have gone to bed. Some experimentation may give you the answer. If not, I suggest that you see an allergist because that's his specialty—running down things which cause allergic reactions.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: If a person has taken too much Bayrol extract that the person did not really need, will there be aftereffects?—N.S.

Yes—depending, of course, on how much is taken. The effects would be the same as those of a toxic goiter which is producing too much thyroid hormone: nervousness, irritability, fast pulse rate, elevated blood pressure.

Don't take chances with "kidney trouble." It may be only minor, but it can be dangerous.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I had an abortion and had intercourse within the first six weeks, although my doctor advised me not to. He told me I should start my period no later than six weeks. It has been about 10 weeks and I still have not started my period.

What are my chances of being pregnant again, and why are patients advised not to have intercourse during the six-week period?—A.B.

It is always possible that you ovulated within the six weeks period, and pregnancy could have occurred. I suggest you check out this possibility.

The reason for the advice not to have intercourse within the six weeks period is to avoid possible infection. Also, the uterus may take six weeks to revert to normal after any pregnancy. Sometimes, the healing period is less, but six weeks is the usual suggested period of abstinence.

Canadians Have Woes In Mexico

MEXICO CITY AP — Immigration authorities at Mexico City's Benito Juarez International Airport Saturday denied knowledge of an incident in which two Canadians alleged they were beaten and denied entry into Mexico.

Paul Julienbrower, 30, a gardener and handicrafts fair organizer and Raquild Desforges, 28, a fashion designer, made the charges Saturday in Ottawa and demanded a public apology from the Mexican government. "We don't know of any such incident," a spokesmen for the airport's immigration department said.

Canadian Pacific Air admitted transporting the two passengers but its representative here refused to discuss the matter.

Both the Mexican foreign ministry and the interior secretariat, which handle affairs of foreigners in the country, were closed for the weekend.

Local 1328, Canadian Union of Public Employees, called the vote after 6½ months of contract negotiations with the board.

Indian Band Will Press Claim To Pelee Isle, Leamington

KINGSVILLE, Ont. (CP) — The Caldwell Indian band, which has presented a claim of aboriginal rights to Pelee Island, Point Pelee, the town of Leamington and land between Point Pelee and Kingsville, decided Sunday to take its fight to court if the federal government does not comply with its claim.

Band members were told at a meeting in this community, about 15 miles southeast of Windsor, that the federal department of Indian affairs is still studying the claim and has not made a decision.

Del Riley of Ottawa, research secretary for the Union of Ontario Indians, said the claim is based on two leases dating from 1788.

Mr. Riley says Chief William Caldwell leased Pelee Island from the federal government in 1788 for 999 years. Five days later he leased a part of the mainland 11 miles long and six miles wide along Lake Erie for 990 years.

The Caldwells gave the lease for Pelee Island to Thomas McKee on May 1, 1788. When McKee died, his son leased the land to the McCormick family who sought clear title to the land in 1864.

Mr. Riley said documents show the Canadian government agreed to give title to the land to the McCormicks if the family could prove that there were no longer any of the Caldwell band living. The McCormicks could not prove that, and as a result did not obtain title.

In 1852, a grandson of William Caldwell petitioned Parliament for return of the land. He claimed that under the Indian Affairs Act, only the Caldwells could hold a lease for the land.

He said the leases to the McKee and McCormick families were never valid. The Canadian government did not act that time to return the land to the Caldwells, Mr. Riley said.

In 1922, the Caldwell band was removed from Point Pelee when the government decided to make it a national park. Mr. Riley said, and band members have since been scattered across southern Ontario and Michigan.

Mr. Riley said aboriginal rights to the land have never been surrendered. "The Caldwell band is a transient group of Indians who were squeezed out of their land bit by bit."

Carl Johnson of Detroit, chief of the band, said the band does not intend to "disrupt any individuals in the claimed area" but wants a reserve in or near the area and a monetary settlement.

The band has 70 adult members.

Customs Official Held as Smuggler

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Eight persons, including a Canadian customs official, were arrested and charged with smuggling Saturday after RCMP officers seized a truck loaded with automobile parts at the Detroit-Windsor border.

Authorities said Sunday the arrests followed 20 months of investigation by RCMP in Windsor, Hamilton and Toronto, in conjunction with the FBI and United States customs officials.

Charged with smuggling are Clare Guenot, 52, a customs officer, James Joseph Kocsis, 38, Geza Lukacs, 46, Sherman Filby, 31, and Michael Kocsis, 36, all of Windsor, Michael Toth, 38, of Toronto and Ante Grbesa of Hamilton.

An eighth person, Gordon Stockfish of Burlington, near Hamilton, was charged with possession of smuggled goods.

Police said the case involves "substantial" quantities of auto parts smuggled into Canada from the U.S. and distributed throughout Ontario.

Cpl. Bill Warrak, of the RCMP detachment here, said the confiscated auto parts included such items as ignition wires, distributors and brake pads.

Poet Dies

LONDON (AP) — Edmund Blunden, 77, English poet, critic and writer, died Sunday night at his home in Suffolk after a long illness. He was best known for his book Undertones of War, describing his experiences as a soldier in the trenches during the First World War. Blunden was professor of poetry at Oxford University from 1966 to 1968.

3,520 Teachers Expected to Quit

TORONTO (CP) — Executives of Ontario's separate school teachers said Saturday there is little hope that mass resignations by 3,520 teachers Jan. 31 can be avoided.

Robert Cooney, president of the Ontario English Catholic Teachers Association (OECTA), told a news conference that teachers in seven areas are disillusioned at prospects for settlement.

Unless agreements are reached in the next ten days—"a highly unlikely prospect"—246 schools with 90,000 pupils will be without teachers Feb. 1, he said.

Mr. Cooney added teachers will not be dissuaded by a warning last month from Education Minister Thomas Wells that the legislature would be recalled to pass legislation to thwart the resignations.

Following a one-day walkout by 105,000 teachers across the province Dec. 14, Mr. Wells agreed not to proceed with controversial Bill 274 in return for assurances that teachers would strive for contract settlements.

Mr. Cooney said Mr. Wells has done little to help resolve the deadlocks between school boards and teachers and the last month has been "fruitless."

Bill 274, designed to prevent mass resignations from being used as strike tactics, would postpone the effective date of teachers' resignations until Aug. 31.

The bill remains on the order paper, however, with the legislature in recess until late February. Mr. Wells has said the bill if teachers proceed with their resignations.

Mr. Cooney said teachers will not be intimidated by the bill and that an Ad Hoc committee of all teacher groups is still in existence to oppose it.

Neil Deerby, chairman of the Ad Hoc committee that arranged the Dec. 18 walkout said representatives of all five affiliate bodies of the Ontario Teachers Federation will be meeting later this week to plan strategy.

Mr. Cooney said no discussions have taken place in two weeks in the seven disputed areas—Essex, Huron-Perth, Carleton, Sudbury, Chaplein, Wellington and Windsor.

Teacher negotiators in the first four districts listed have asked for mediation, but no breakthrough is likely, he said.

In Chapleau, teachers and trustees are planning a meeting, while in Wellington and Windsor school boards have refused teachers' request for voluntary arbitration.

In all areas, the issues are similar—a cost-of-living increase of about eight per cent on salaries, an automatic grievance procedure and the right to negotiate working conditions.

Mr. Cooney said the school boards involved claim they do not have funds to finance the increases and he stressed that the ministry has made no effort to resolve the financial dilemma.

"There is no reason to believe that the turmoil of these times will be of only short duration. The next few years will face Hydro with challenges equal to and perhaps surpassing any it has faced in the past," the report says.

The report adds that Hydro regards the hearings as an opportunity to explain to the public its policies and practices and as a means of having its plans and policies subjected to "critical and independent examination."

The proposed expansion program, the report says, "is of great magnitude in terms of human effort, financial cost and general impact upon the economy of this province."

Text of the brief was released in advance of presentation.

Hydro Anticipates Doubling Its System

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario Hydro said today it estimates it will have to nearly double its province-wide power system during the next eight years to meet an increasing demand for electrical energy.

The utility, in a brief to an Ontario energy board hearing, also says that in order to meet rising costs "it will be necessary for its rates to increase in the order of at least 10 per cent per year over at least the next three years."

The public hearing, established to review any rate changes to take effect after Jan. 1, 1975, is expected to last several months.

The report says Ontario Hydro must expand its system by 32 per cent, at a capital cost of $16 billion, by 1982.

Women's Lib Wants Divorce Insurance

NEW YORK (Reuter) — The National Organization for Women (N.O.W.) wants to change the image of the divorced woman—from the injured party to the activist demanding laws for marriage contracts and divorce insurance.

About 1,000 women cheered a suggestion by Betty Friedan, one of the founders of the women's liberation movement and N.O.W., to establish divorce centres. These would provide information on the rights of lawyers and court proceedings, have private investigators, psychiatric help to assist women in adjusting to the break-up and divorce and marriage counselling.

The divorce rate in the United States has soared, especially in the last five years, not so much because of the married movement but because "traditional" sex roles are truly obsolete and can only result in dead-end marriages," she said.

Resolutions passed during the weekend meeting would make it as difficult to get married as it is to get divorced.

The resolutions also would make it obligatory for engaged couples to get insurance paying for emotional and career rehabilitation for divorcing spouses, allow for private marriage contracts, for equal distribution of spouses' earnings, recognize children as people rather than property, and make uniform state laws on divorce so that a husband cannot escape to a state with more liberal laws.

The conference called for an end to discrimination against divorced, single, or homosexual people who have chosen alternate life-styles to the traditional marriage.

Meir Wants Canal Opened

JERUSALEM (AP) — The disengagement agreement separating Israeli and Egyptian forces on the Suez front should lead to the reopening of the Suez canal, Premier Golda Meir told the Knesset today.

It also should end Egyptian naval blockades of Israeli shipping, Mrs. Meir said.

Israel's new ceasefire line in the Sinai desert "does not constitute a permanent border for time of peace," and the government is prepared, to negotiate the return of more territory for a permanent settlement to the Middle East crisis, Mrs. Meir said in a major policy statement to the Israeli parliament.

Official statements from Cairo "show that the government of Egypt intends to start clearing the canal and fitting it for shipping, and to work for the population and rebuilding of the abandoned towns and the restoration of normal civilian life in the canal area," she said.

"These statements confirm our assumption that the Egyptian government prefers to rehabilitate the deserted Suez canal zone and turn it once again into an artery of life. If this aim actually begins to be achieved without delay, it can be a highly significant turning point . . . from war to the direction of peace."

The disengagement agreement negotiated by United States State Secretary Henry Kissinger also means an Egyptian commitment "to refrain from blockade and obstruction of shipping to Israel and from Israel through the Bab al Mandab Strait," at the southern end of the Red Sea, she said.

All-out Miners' Strike Threatened in Britain

LONDON (AP) — The union leader of Britain's 270,000 coal miners warned today there may be an all-out strike if the government continues to block the miners' demand for higher wages.

Joe Gormley, president of the National Union of Mine workers, said union leaders will meet Wednesday to consider holding a vote among the miners on whether to call a strike.

The miners now are refusing to work overtime and during weekends. Their action has cut Britain's coal supplies by more than 30 per cent and led to a shortening of the work week to conserve energy supplies.

Gormley said the overtime ban has not bitten deeply enough into the country's coal stocks.

"Inevitably there is bound to be a call from the coal faces for us to toughen up our action." He told reporters "My inclination is that there might be a call for a ballot on strike action."

Prime Minister Edward Heath's cabinet is reported split over his refusal to give in to the coal miners' pay demands and end the cut in coal production which the government blames for Britain's electric power crisis.

Political correspondents of London newspapers said Heath's ministers are also divided over whether he should call a general election next month.

Some ministers were reported adamant that the government must give in to the miners' demands for pay raises above the ceilings set by Heath's anti-inflation program. Others believe the most important thing is to end the miners' ban on overtime and Sunday work and get deliveries of coal to power stations back to normal.

China May Be Preparing Invasion Of Islands Claimed by Six States

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese government said today the Chinese naval force that drives Vietnamese fishermen from the Paracel Islands last weekend may be preparing to head for the Spratly chain farther south.

United States sources, however, said they have no indication that the force is moving south. Observers in Tokyo also doubt such a move will be made.

The Spratly archipelago is 270 miles from the South Vietnamese coast in the South China Sea and about the same distance from the Philippines and Malaysian Borneo. It is claimed by South Vietnam, China, Taiwan, the Philippines, Malaysia and Singapore.

Informed sources said South Vietnam recently established an outpost in the Spratlys, which like the Paracels consist of uninhabited coral reefs and atolls. But also like the Paracels, there may be oil there. —

South Vietnam sent a note today to the members of the Paris conference on Vietnam, protesting the Chinese move into the Paracels. The conference, which agreed last March to guarantee the Vietnam peace accords and the territorial integrity of Vietnam, includes the United States, the Soviet Union and China.

The note said that by Sunday night Chinese troops had seized all of the islands in the Paracel archipelago, "and the Chinese naval task force presently prepared to head for the Spratly archipelago."

Saigon also has asked for a meeting of the United Nations Security Council to plead its case for the Paracels, but it appeared unlikely the council will take up the issue. Council president Gonzalo Facio of Costa Rica says he will call a meeting only if nine of the 15 council members approve, and observers doubt this can be mustered in the face of China's opposition.

The South Vietnamese government also announced that a patrol boat which it said earlier that the Chinese sank actually is badly damaged and is making its way back to Da Nang.

The government said it doesn't know how many casualties there are among the ship's crew of 84 men, all of whom it previously listed as missing. But it said it is sending naval units to help the crippled ship into port.

Colombian Airliner Is Flown to Havana

HAVANA (Reuter) — A hijacked Colombian airliner landed in Cuba today but there was no immediate word on the about 20 hostages aboard or the fate of the reported lone hijacker.

The plane was surrounded by police and interior ministry officials. Reporters were denied access to the landing area and were not permitted sight of the aircraft.

The plane, a four-engined Viscount turbo-prop owned by the Colombian domestic airline Aeropesca, was seized over southern Colombia Monday with 65 passengers and five crew members on board.

It refuelled in the southwestern city of Cali, where the hijacker, apparently a lone 23-year-old Colombian identified as Winger, allowed 26 women and children and four men to disembark.

It had taken off from Pasto, near the frontier with Ecuador, and was bound for Bogota. But the hijacker forced the pilot to fly to the north Colombian port of Barranquilla.

There it burst two tires on landing and had to wait about six hours for replacements to arrive from Bogota, before taking off again Monday night for Cuba.

The hijacker, identified by police as Jorge Raimundo Tapia Canas, gave a radio interview from the plane as it stood on the runway at Barranquilla.

He said his motive was political, and he intended, through the hijacking, to "reject the system which oppresses the Colombian people and the Latin American people."

Energy Parley Opens 'Canada First' Trudeau's Plea

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau asked the provinces today to put the national good ahead of all other considerations as he launched the conference on energy.

Speaking first at the start of the two-day open meeting on the cost and distribution of the country's abundant energy resources, he said "as our very presence . . . attests, we are fraternal members of a political community."

At the same time, he acknowledged the constitutional fact that the provinces own the natural resources and have a right to a fair and reasonable monetary return.

He referred to the "sudden crisis" of upward-rocketing international petroleum prices that confront the country with heavy increases for consumers in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Alberta on the other hand, as main oil producer, expects high volumes of new income.

Said Mr. Trudeau:

"It is within political communities—where people join for common purposes—where they have the legal structures for effective social action—that men and women can be classed in the humane idea that we are part of one another.

"It is because the consequences of this sudden crisis are so great that this conference must not be solely about oil, or even about energy. It must also concern the nature of our Canadian community, and the purposes which join us in our confederation . . .

In his call for delegates to dedicate themselves to the national good, Mr. Trudeau was overshadowing the basic issue leading up to this critical meeting.

Money is the issue—the revenues that Alberta as primary petroleum supplier should obtain from domestic users and U.S. customers and the prices that other provinces should pay.

Under the British North America Act provinces are given control of resources within their boundaries but the federal government has control of interprovincial and international trade. And it is here that federal and provincial officials find the strong point of disagreement.

Inside their boundaries, provinces have autonomy regarding resources such as minerals, hydro, petroleum and natural gas. But when that resource crosses a provincial boundary it becomes a matter of federal interest and postwar action.

The federal government had granted subsidies to consumers in and east of the Ottawa Valley, provinces on the imported oil, now more expensive than supplies from Alberta and minor amounts from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

But there was also the question of how the established system of federal equalization payments—federal outlays from tax revenues to help seven provinces equal the wealth of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta—might be maintained if Alberta income surged upward by handing a voluntary price freeze on its oil.

Domestic crude has been frozen at about $4 a barrel since September by a government-oil industry agreement.

Dollar High

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The United States government fears the dollar has become overvalued in relation to some other major currencies because of over-reaction to the world oil shortage, Treasury Secretary George Schultz has urged countries with large dollar holdings, particularly West Germany, to unload some of them in foreign exchange markets to hold down the value of the U.S. currency.

Russia Protests

MOSCOW (Reuter) — The Soviet Union has issued a strong protest to China over the detention and expulsion of five of its Peking embassy personnel and accused the Chinese authorities of using threats and violence. Ontario Warning

$10-barrel Oil Would Cost Jobs

OTTAWA (CP) — Ontario entered the national federal-provincial conference on energy today saying that a sudden increase in the price of oil to $10 a barrel would cause an immediate loss of 70,000 jobs and a three-per-cent drop in the gross provincial product (GNP).

In two background papers tabled at the opening day of the two-day session, Ontario said the province's economic outlook has weakened as a result of the current problems in energy shortages and prices.

"Even with the assumption of very limited oil price increases, and no severe curbs, the growth rate in real GPP will be four to five per cent in real terms compared to an original forecast of about six per cent," the paper said.

Ontario's economic performance would adjust to relation to oil price increases. Western Canadian oil currently costs about $4 a barrel west of the Ottawa Valley.

A preliminary analysis, the paper said, indicates that a post-oil price increase $10 a barrel would cut real GPP growth in Ontario by 3.5 per cent, resulting in a loss of 70,000 jobs."

As well, the study warned that inflationary pressures on the economy could boost the consumer price index by as much as 10 per cent.

On the longer term, the efforts of Ottawa and the 10 provincial premiers at this conference to begin the drive for national energy self-sufficiency would produce severe economic stresses with profound implications for fiscal, monetary and manpower policies.

Premier William Davis said Monday on the eve of the conference that the province's leadership will determine if the conference is to achieve even a minimum success.

"It is an occasion when the federal government can and should assert a strong leadership role," he said in an interview.

The premier said Ontario will be behind Ottawa in its efforts to achieve a consensus among the 10 provincial leaders on a "uniform price for all across the country, apart from transportation and oil refining costs.

Yuletide Import

Flown in from Germany, this tree was one of the few reminders of Christmas with the Canadian Contingent in Egypt. Recreating the Yuletide atmosphere are, left to right, Master Corporal Bruce A. Drumond, finance clerk, Private Yolk Vicho Ex Keinem of the Finland contingent, and Corporal James W. McNamee, military police. Master Corporal Drumond is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Drummond of Peterborough, and Cpl. McNamee's parents are Mr. and Mrs. James V. McNamee of Belleville. (Canadian Forces Photo)

Slippery Streets Blitz the Blitz

Yesterday's winter wonderland of freezing rain wasn't quite wonderful as far as drivers in Belleville were concerned. But for the annual January campaign of the Ability Fund, formerly the March of Dimes, it was even less wonderful.

Early Monday afternoon, Belleville's local Rehabilitation Foundation for the Disabled director, Vera Morphy, was forced to cancel the Blitz Night -- the first day of the week-long drive to collect funds for the physically handicapped adult.

Through the Ability Fund, money is collected to help provide artificial limbs, swimming classes, summer camps, job training and placement for the disabled.

Although Mrs. Morphy optimistically hoped the weather would improve to allow canvassers to make their door-to-door tours of city neighborhoods, the icy pavements shattered her hopes.

"Some brave souls went out and did canvass," said the Belleville chairman. "But I feel that I don't have the returns to make any assessment or the evaluation of the money collected."

Far less than the normal 600 canvassers were out last night.

"The thing we really missed is the excitement of the first night when we bring the money in to the Toronto Dominion bank," she said. The Blitz Night usually has all canvassers making a big push for funds. Through the week, till Monday, Jan. 28, the Ability Fund volunteers will be accepting funds.

Mrs. Morphy urged canvassers to continue, with the door-to-door work throughout the week.

Last year, Belleville's campaign, one that is approximately 465 other Ontario centres, produced $7,800, $700 short of money collected in 1972.

Recently, part of the 1973 funds were donated to the Canadian Hearing Society in Belleville. The local Rehabilitation Foundation branch will continue to support the home for handicapped adults.

In one final note of optimism, Mrs. Morphy, who is a qualified official approval for the campaign from the Hospital Appeals Review Board, said, "Boy, wouldn't it be nice if the sun shone for the rest of the week."

Former Moderator Speaker Tonight

A former moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, Dr. Finlay G. Stewart, DD, LLD, will speak tonight to members of the Belleville Sales and Ad Club.

While in university he was involved in many branches of athletics, earning himself a "T" bronze letter from the U of T. Subsequently a good deal of his drive went toward community services of a wide range.

Dr. Stewart resides in Kitchener with his wife and four children. n 1969-70 he was chosen citizen of the year by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Dr. Stewart has spoken to the Sales and Ad Club once previously. The meeting will be held at the Oddfellows Hall. Indent .jb

Reeve Is New Mayor of Picton

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — Town council has elected Reeve James Bird as mayor of Picton for the remainder of the term being served by the late Harvey J. McFarland.

Mayor Bird was first elected to town council in 1956 and has been returned steadily with a large majority.

A school teacher since 1937 Mayor Bird has taught in Picton schools since 1950 when he supervised classes at Benson Park. He also has taught at Mary Street School, now demolished, and served as principal there.

When the school was closed out Mayor Bird was transferred to Queen Elizabeth school as vice-principal and is now co-ordinator there.

"It is with a heavy heart that I accept the responsibility and duties of this office," commented the new mayor as he referred to the death of Harvey McFarland.

He said that he hoped ratepayers would not expect him to fill his shoes.

"I do not possess those strengths of character that were his," he remarked.

With the vacancy left when reeve Bird accepted the office of mayor council was required to name a successor and deputy-reeve Ross Cronkwright was elected as reeve.

Council deferred the appointment of a new member to replace Mr. Richardson until the next regular session in February.

Mayor Bird said that he had obtained verbal assent from former Picton mayor Margaret Ackerman that she would act as a councillor for the balance of the term. She was defeated more than one year ago in an election case against the late Mr. McFarland.

Reeve Ross Cronkwright asked if the contenders closest to winning a council seat in the last election had been considered for the office.

He was told that one of the men had not expressed particular interest and had said he would not take office if former mayor Ackerman would come forward.

Taylor Pledges Assistance To Lake Park Land Owners

GLENORA — James Taylor, MPP Prince Edward-Lennox has pledged assistance to concerned property owners at Lake-On-The-Mountain — proposed site of 368-acre day camp announced last week by the province.

At a public meeting at Lake-On-The-Mountain Monday night approximately 50 land owners signed their names and stated whether they would agree to sell their properties to the government at any price.

"If you don't want to sell, now is the time to get together. People's minds can be changed," said Mr. Taylor mentioning civil servants as an example.

He said that his interpretation of the natural resources ministry's announcement is that it intends to take all the shorefront of the lake "one way or another."

Mr. Taylor pointed out, however, that an area for argument will remain until the land is acquired.

He noted that it did not seem that anyone attending the public meeting was opposed to parks.

Hugh Frisell, a resort operator at Lake-On-The-Mountain for 30 years claims the ministry's announcement that it will acquire the shoreline property has greatly harmed his business. Concerned vacationers want to know if he will still be open next summer.

"We're like sitting ducks in a pond," he observed.

A woman who lives with her husband near Lake-On-The-Mountain noted that she had come to its quieter area for health reasons and did not agree that the land should be appropriated as a vacation area for city residents.

Mr. Taylor suggested it is difficult to attempt to "put a girdle around growth" and commented that this area seems to have adequate park lands now.

He observed that these parks are "not for the people here but for the people who would like to be here.

"We have to be mindful of the people with vested interests here," said the MPP asking for the names of residents who do not want to sell at any price.

"I certainly will go to bat for you," he remarked.

One resident attending the meeting outlined how government acquisition of his property could force him to sacrifice newly-found roots in the community.

He said that as a member of the armed forces he and his family on occasion live houses in 28 years and were eager to settle down. He cruised the Prince Edward area in a helicopter and decided on property at Lake-On-The-Mountain. The land was obtained through a veteran's loan.

The man then found a job as a teacher in Prince Edward and moved here with his family.

Students Indent Jm

The students were accompanied by three teachers and three members of the CFB Trenton para-rescue team, who instructed in survival techniques.

The group left the school Friday afternoon and returned late Saturday, spending the night in tents. The para-rescue team taught the group how to build shelters, obtain food and water and use compasses.

He pointed out that since the ministry's announcement of a new park it has become impossible for him to sell his home.

He is now 50 years of age and is paying off a 30-year mortgage. If park development requires the 20 years projected in one news report the man will complete mortgage payments in time to sell his property to the government. He will again be forced to move.

The resident felt the government should buy its land now since "this limbo is not fair."

A young woman present said that she and her husband own property near the lake but now are concerned about building a home on land that may be expropriated by the government.

Mr. Taylor said that he has talked with Gus Rhodes, parliamentary assistant to Natural Resources minister Leo Bernier. Reportedly, the government expects to acquire the needed land by 1976.

"They would acquire it just as fast as people would sell it" said Mr. Taylor.

He commented that he understood the government property owners opposed to sale at any price and added, "I'm for you. I don't see why you can't have private property in this type of setting."

The MPP told those at the meeting that problems involved are not "simple" and could not be solved by one session. He promised to work on behalf of land owners unwilling to sell at any price.

Town Hall Holdback

TRENTON—When a firm undertakes to construct a building, the owners retain a holdback on the total project cost -- an insurance package that ensures odds and ends are taken care of once the building seems complete.

Apparently the holdback on Trenton's new municipal offices is going to be held back indefinitely.

Town council was told by one of its officials Monday night that female staff members were forced to wear slacks in the office due to unsatisfactory performance of the heating system, the roof was leaking and the area in the vicinity of the elevator was poorly finished.

"We'll get these things fixed or that hold back will be held back a long time," said Councillor Ed Todd.

Town clerk O.W. Larry claimed because of heating system problems many staff received colds and general office efficiency is down.

He was instructed to write the firm of Miron-Wiggers outlining any deficient areas and requesting service.

"You have council's permission to make it strong," said Mayor Bob Patrick.

The town is under no obligation to forward the 15 per cent hold back on funds until the entire project is satisfactory. Once all work has been taken care of, council has 30 days to release the funds.

Council Remembers

PICTON — Town councillors Monday night observed a two-minute silence in memory of the late Harvey J. McFarland during a special meeting to name a new mayor.

Individual tributes then were offered by members of council including town clerk Andrew Jarvis.

"Harvey McFarland was a big man in all measures, big in heart, big in spirit and a strong man in his convictions and in his resolve to get things done," said town clerk Andrew Jarvis.

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids... and repair damaged tissue. A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissues.

One hemorrhoidal case history after another reported "very striking improvement." Pain was promptly and gently relieved . . . actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most important—this improvement was maintained in cases where clinical observations were continued over a period of many months. Furthermore, these tests and observations were made on patients with a wide variety of hemorrhoidal conditions. All this was accomplished

Fighters Signed Over To Venezuela at CFB

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Canada's controversial $22 million sale of fighter jets to Venezuela ended its final chapter at CFB Trenton Monday as the last two aircraft changed hands.

In a short ceremony with little fanfare, Venezuelan ambassador to Canada Jesus Carbonell Izquierdo signed the ownership papers for the CF-5s which now will join 18 others already in his country.

The ambassador made no official remarks during the ceremony but said the aircraft would "be used to patrol and protect Venezuelan territory and oil fields."

While it was reported the majority of the short-ranged jets were Canadian Armed Forces aircraft repainted, the two aircraft sold Monday were the first to roll off Canadair assembly lines, completely marked with Venezuelan colors.

The federal government has been criticized for having developed a surplus that allowed for the sale of the planes.

When the aircraft were originally ordered from Canadair, the Department of National Defence was looking an expanded number of fighter squadrons.

With budget cuts and reduction of armed forces, many of the CF-5s were put in mothballs.

Referring to the entire package deal, government spokesman Cliff Brown said "we're knocking something off the cost to compensate for depreciation. No way are we making money."

Mr. Brown acknowledged the two aircraft sold Monday had logged only a combined total of 12 flying hours and that these planes would be followed from the assembly plant by several more which would see Canadian service.

Mr. Brown could not say what a single plane would cost the Canadian taxpayer but said they were being sold for about $1.8 million each to Venezuela. He also declined to estimate the cost of the two new planes sold this week though they are being sold at the $1.8 million price. "I don't know the taxpayer's cost. It's hard to say. We know more or less what the aircraft cost," he said.

Venezuelan flight crews will spend the next few days familiarizing themselves with the planes before flying them home. It is expected the planes will have to make at least two stops for re-fueling before reaching South America.

Canadian Talent

Canada Courier, a publication of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is one of the brighter and more informative publications of the federal government information service.

Replete with color pictures, Courier has two editions in English, one for distribution in the United States, the other overseas, as well as editions in French, Spanish, German and Japanese.

Its contents strike a nice balance of interest to readers, with news of the latest industrial developments by Canadian firms and creations of feminine interest such as fashions and the products of firms such as Mayfair Glassware Ltd., of Portage La Prairie, which has been in business only seven years and exports its colorful and multi-shaped wares as far away as Australia.

But then Canada Courier is no bastion of male chauvinism, the editor and assistant editor being Anna Armstrong Hibberd and Lisa Shapiro respectively.

A recent edition provided material on a wide variety of products ranging from the Champion road graders of the Dominion Road Machinery Co. Ltd. in Cooderich, which are exported to no fewer than 47 countries; to a portable air cleaner from a Downsview firm which sounds like the answer to the allergy sufferer's (and there are many in Belleville) prayer. The manufacturer says the cleaner traps up to 90 per cent of irritants such as dust and pollen in rooms up to 250 square feet.

Power boats and swim 'tan goggles that keep salt water, chlorine, water contaminants and sun out of eyes, products of Quebec firms, and — Toronto-produced inflatable hockey helmets which go to practically all hockey-playing countries, and wooden toys from a Burlington firm are other products listed in this particular issue of Canada Courier, a publication that says a lot about the creative genius of Canadians.

So Much Energy

A neat point on the energy crisis was a recent statement to the Canadian Club of Brantford by Dr. Morris Shumiatcher.

Described as a lawyer from Western Canada, Dr. Shumiatcher said the only lack of energy in Canada results from the welfare policy whereby everyone is looked after, whether he wanted to work or not.

Incentives, he said, have been reduced. How true.

Dr. Shumiatcher also predicted that with the development of new sources of energy the use of oil for heating would become obsolete, and future generations would look back at the use of gasoline and oil for cars the way we look back on our ancestors who worked with talkow to make candles.

Isn't it ironic that all this is resulting from the action of the Arabs in reducing oil exports. Such "energy" crisis stimulated ideas for probing other power sources, ideas which no doubt were in the subconscious of scientists for a long time but whose time had not come.

Marked Down

Not all food items are expensive these days. And, incredible as it may seem, there is the odd item that gets marked down, and from an already low, low price at that. At the supermarket the other day we noticed that a can of apple drink, which for some time had been retailing at 29 cents, was selling for a mere quarter. Yes, all of 25 cents.

Bananas, those great old standbys, also continue in the dirt-cheap category. You can pick up a dozen or so of those small ones for 30 to 40 cents. As everyone knows though prices of meat and items like biscuits are not so accommodating. That 15-ounce packet of imported shortbread we mentioned recently has been at the 75 cents for some time now, compared with the 49 cents it cost about six months ago.

So if it is any comfort to the manufacturers or to the retailers, or whoever regulates these things, we know some folks have stopped buying that particular product.

Bring the price down — it did drop to 57 cents at one point recently — and perhaps it will sell again.

Meanwhile we are more than ever convinced that the Food Prices Review Board has little or no influence in these matters and should be disbanded.

United States and Germany Lead

Canada Is One of the Principal Tourist Generators

Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

Over the past twenty years, tourism has become the fastest growing industry in the world. As estimated by the World Tourist Organization, from 1960 to 1972 annual international tourist arrivals from all countries grew from 25 million to almost 200 million, an average growth rate of about 19 per cent a year and foreign exchange earnings from tourism rose from $4.1 billion to some $24 billion, an average annual increase of about 11 percent.

International tourism is now the largest single item in the world's foreign trade and for some countries the most important export industry and earner of foreign exchange. For other countries, tourism represents a promising source for economic development and its significance for stimulating investment, and for earning foreign exchange and creating employment opportunities is widely recognized.

For statistical purposes, the term "tourist" describes temporary visitors staying at least 24 hours in a country other than that of usual residence whose journey can be classified under one of the following headings: a) leisure (recreation, holiday, health, study, religion and sport); b) business, family, mission, meeting.

"Excursionists", i.e. temporary visitors staying less than 24 hours in the country visited (including travellers on cruises) are excluded. The statistics also exclude travellers, who in the legal sense, do not enter the country, e.g. air travellers in transit who do not leave an airport's transit area.

The most important feature of current international tourism flows is the extremely high proportion of travel generated by relatively few countries. The great volume of international travel takes place within the developed nations of Europe and North America and between these nations.

The United States and Germany are by far the most important countries in terms of generating tourist movements within Western Europe.

Other leading tourist-generating countries and areas Canada, France, the United Kingdom, Japan and the Netherlands.

Canada is both one of the world's leading travel destinations and tourist-generating countries. In 1972, receipts from international travel amounted to $1,226 million or almost 19 percent of total service receipts in the balance of payments. Compared with merchandise exports, travel receipts ranked third, exceeded only by motor vehicles and parts and woodpulp and newsprint. Canada ranked eighth in travel earnings from non-resident visitors, following the United States, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria and France (tied), and Britain. In that order.

However, because of Canada's high standard of living, and the propensity of Canadians to travel abroad, Canada has generally tended to operate "in the red" on the travel account. Canadian payments on the travel account amounted to $1,456 million in 1972, resulting in a deficit of $230 million. The estimated 9.8 million Canadian tourists who visited the United States accounted for almost 70 percent of U.S. foreign visitors and added greatly to the revenues to the United States economy.

Internationally, Canada ranked third in total resident travel expenditures abroad, behind the United States and Germany.

In 1972, more than 65 per cent of Canada's foreign tourists were from the United States. The estimated 14.6 million Americans who stayed one or more nights in Canada generated over $1 billion in receipts. Canada thus received about 19 percent or the greatest percentage of United States travel payments in foreign countries. Overseas visitors to Canada in 1972 numbered 635,000 and they spent about $204 million. Visitors from the United Kingdom accounted for about 40 per cent of the total and a further 14 percent came from Germany.

Substantial numbers of visitors also came from Belgium, the Netherlands, Japan and Italy.

Because of the ever-all trade surplus, the development of tourism in Canada has not been given the priority accorded to it in many other countries. However, there are several factors which would indicate Canada's suitability as a tourist venue, in particular Canada's proximity to the United States, the world's premier travel market.

Judgments Based On Appearance

Brockville Recorder and Times

"Everyone's heard about beauty being skin deep but it appears from studies in the United States that skin-deep may be deeper than most people think. Apparently most people judge another by his or her looks and in many instances this can be disastrous.

"There is a great deal of discrimination based on looks too. And in this regard an organization has sprung in the U.S. to do something about it. It is called "Uglies Unlimited".

"Blacks, Indians and others have had their day in the sun, now it's time for the ugly people of all races and creeds. The "Uglies Unlimited" recently picketed an airline in Fort-Worth,Texas, for discriminating against them in their ads and application forms which sought "attractive" secretaries and hostesses and the like. But the situation is far worse than the "Uglies" suspect.

In a study conducted at the University of Michigan Law School, two undergraduate students acted as jurors in a mock automobile negligence trial that had been recorded on tape. As they listened, photographs of a defendant and plaintiff appeared on a screen.

For some of the jurors, pictures of an unattractive plaintiff and unattractive defendant were shown while the process was reverted for a second group. As a "control" condition, jurors saw no photos at all.

In the case where the plaintiff was attractive and the defendant unattractive, 61 per cent of the jurors gave a verdict favored the plaintiff. By contrast, only 17 per cent of the jurors favored an unattractive plaintiff, while 41 per cent of the control group found for the plaintiff whose photograph was not shown.

In a similar study at the University of Minnesota, a professor of psychology found that a physically attractive woman has a better chance of receiving a light sentence for a criminal conviction than an unattractive one.

Dr. Harold Sigall conducted a mock trial before 60 male and female students. A third of the jurors was given a photograph of a good-looking defendant in a burglary case, another third a photograph of a less attractive woman. The remaining control group saw no photograph.

On the basis of the same evidence, the jurors gave the attractive defendants a sentence averaging 2.8 years, while the less attractive woman was sent to the clink for a term nearly twice as long.

Now that's discrimination.

BBC's 'Open Door' TV Programs Involve the Public

By GORDON KINGHAM is UNESCO Features

Looking like a junior sister of Shirley Temple in her heyday, a round-cheeked little girl smiled irresistibly into the television cameras less. Then, cramming her pudgy fingers into her mouth, she pulled out a full set of upper dentures and flashed them happily at her audience.

"And she's just six years old", said the unseen commentator.

This was the opening shot of a program broadcast by the BBC television services last summer in the Open Door series of "audience access" programs. And it must have made the few dozing viewers still with their sets at eleven thirty, sit up and take notice!

But Open Door programs are not always so professionally perfective. For the series was devised by the BBC as a response to the demand for more public participation in program building on television in Britain.

Trends in the United States and Canada, spurred by the rapid growth of cable television, are favoring more and more local programs and local topics.

In North America, the do-it-yourself television program is now becoming relatively common for certain types of local subjects which appeal to a limited local audience.

The BBC, however, sees its task differently and the aim of the Open Door series is to offer a "national network audience ... albeit reduced in numbers by the late hour of these transmissions - to any social or professional group who wants to make a program , put over an argument, blow a trumpet or wave a flag.

The BBC offers, without any charge, all the technical advice and equipment. Studio facilities and a film crew for location work, help with designing the program and advice whenever it is wanted. And, of course they provide the audience - estimated at up to 500,000 for the Open Door program.

Program time is offered to "any group, association, organization, community or consortium of individuals with views or activities which are not represented on the air in the course of other programming and whose purpose is not to promote or sponsor a political party or group, or to pursue an industrial dispute".

Of course, many more applications are made than can be slotted into a once-weekly program and advice whenever it is wanted. And, of course they provide the audience - estimated at up to 500,000 for the Open Door program.

Program time is offered to "any group, association, organization, community or consortium of individuals with views or activities which are not represented on the air in the course of other programming and whose purpose is not to promote or sponsor a political party or group, or to pursue an industrial dispute".

Of course, many more applications are made than can be slotted into a once-weekly program. And a committee has to decide which groups shall be offered the chance of appearing.

There are also a few general rules which must be followed: no advertising of any sort is permitted. Obscenity and indecent to violence of any kind, as well as racialist propaganda, is forbidden. These rules are defined as much to protect the BBC as for any other reason and, as most of the programs are transmitted live, the Corporation remains exposed to a certain degree of risk if, for instance, it were confronted with an unscrupulous group.

The best programs in the series, have been those where the message was clear. The program that opened with the two-cahre six-year-old, for instance, was presented by a group of dentists whose claim was that Britain's National Health Service neglected preventive dentistry.

The service could save the public a great deal of money and discomfort, they maintained, if dentists were encouraged to hit at the causes of dental decay rather than spend their time patching up and replacing damaged and diseased teeth.

Another Open Door program that enjoyed success was one made by a group of black schoolteachers "looking at racialism from the inside". Press and public reactions were vigorous and there seems little doubt that this unorthodox presentation of a case many white teachers take a fresh look at their textbooks and reappraise many of their own attitudes.

Several of the programs have aroused public interest more through the subjects they dealt with than because of what they had to say about them. One Open Door transmission, filmed partly inside a prison, was made by a group of prisoners and ex-prisoners. The British public has grown used to documentary treatments of the probation and after-care services for ex-prisoners and a number of good films have been made which show something of prison life, but this was the first time that British viewers had been shown what one enthusiastic observer called "the side of the door that has no doorhandle".

School and the Job Market Subject of Study

Brantford Expositor

Not long ago it was being said that education's answer to guarantee graduates a job had disillusioned students with school and caused an increasing number to drop out.

But it turns out that most Canadians do not think of school's primary role as outfitting children for work.

This is one of the interesting findings in a national survey of 1,540 persons by the Canadian Education Association. Whether English or French speaking, Easterner or Westerner, Catholic or Protestant, all were satisfied with education and generally in favor of schools catering to individual students'curiosity and creativity. Schools were doing all right in feeding facts and teaching reasoning. But, the survey was told, more should be done to equip students to adapt to a changing world.

If not guaranteed perennial work, what did they expect from school? Most said schools should concentrate on helping students attain self-satisfaction or develop the ability to get along well with others. It sounds as if some of the criticism levelled individualized education-as-adventure may result from ordinary people as from dreamy pedagogues. And those who originally were more open approach toward education will agree that popular support is no guarantee that this attitude will prevail. For example, after only two years Ontario has backtracked on its experiment in dropping all compulsory subjects in high schools. From next September English and Canadian studies will have to be taken by every entrant. Maybe politications will be going up in open concept schools next.

Those surveyed believed schools' major problem was not lack of discipline but lack of parental interest. Not surprisingly, then, they also felt that guidance counsellors should help students choose their educational path and that schools should guide students mentally and socially and inform them about sex's emotional and physical aspects. All the same time, seven out of every eight said committees of parents, students, teachers and ordinary citizens should be appointed to advise boards or even local schools.

Herein lies the paradox: While Canadians expect schools to guide children, they expect these same schools to listen to advice from outsiders including parents and students. It looks like the k-nd of two-way stretch that can only snap back on itself.

OUR BOARDING HOUSE with Major Hoople

Allmand Rebukes Colleague Marchand

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Jean Marchand's weekend criticism of English-speaking Quebecers was neither fair nor justified, Solicitor-General Warren Allmand said Monday.

In a letter to Mr. Marchand, copies of which were distributed to reporters, Mr. Allmand said to his knowledge the transport minister's comments do not represent present or proposed government policy.

Mr. Marchand told delegates at a Liberal party meeting in Montreal that language friction can be settled within Quebec. Directing his comments to English-language delegates, he said "accept what we have accepted in Ottawa, that the language of the majority there is English."

"It's you who can really solve this problem in Canada by accepting that the language of the majority in Quebec is French."

Mr. Allmand said in the letter the remarks might have been justified a few years ago, but no longer.

In recent years, English-speaking Quebecers have supported strongly "the majority position of French in Quebec, the policies of bilingualism the learning and use of French in Quebec and the policies of the federal and provincial governments on these matters."

Mr. Allmand, who represents the Montreal riding of Notre Dame de Grace, told Mr. Marchand that English Quebec should not be the scapegoat for language difficulties.

Construction Probe Hears Evidence

'Contracts' on Witnesses Asked

TORONTO (CP) — Testimony at an inquiry into violence in the Ontario construction industry described Monday how contracts had been given out to have people killed, and how dynamite had been found in an apartment refrigerator.

Witnesses named Thomas Kiroff of Toronto as the man who owned the explosives and offered the contracts.

Mr. Kiroff's lawyer, John Rosen, tried unsuccessfully to prevent the evidence from being given at the public hearings, ordered last year by the provincial government.

Rejecting the bid, commissioner Judge Harry Waisberg said: "One of the major considerations in setting up the commission was the bombing of Acme Lathing."

Later, an Ontario Supreme Court judge rejected another attempt by Mr. Rosen to keep the evidence secret.

The testimony given was that Mr. Kiroff:

—Had about 15 sticks of dynamite with fuse and blasting caps which he gave to several people for safekeeping.

—Asked Ross Morell, an acquaintance, to kill two men who might talk to the commission. They were Randolph Wheatley and Thomas Andreas.

—Apparently refused to shoot and wound union organizer Bruno Zanini. Mr. Zanini was shot in the hip in 1972.

Det.-Sgt. John Holm of the Metropolitan Toronto Police bomb squad said the dynamite cache was a type of explosive which might have been used in the three bombings of Acme Lathing Ltd. and Gemini Lathing Ltd. while they were in merger talks in 1972.

Mr. Morelli, 33, testifying under the protection of the Canada Evidence Act, said that Mr. Kiroff told him last December that he once blew up Randolph Wheatley's store as a favor, but by then he (Mr. Kiroff) wanted Mr. Wheatley dead.

"He had had feelings with Randy and said 'Randy was turning on him, and asked me if I was interested in doing a contract on Wheatley . . . over the royal commission and over some (drug) deals they'd had together and Randy was always coming out on top and he was coming out of the bottom," Mr. Morell testified.

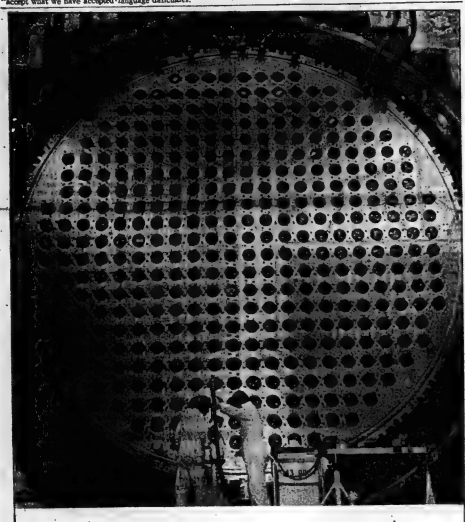
"He said he could scrape up $5,000 for the job and indicated the money would come from several persons," Mr. Morell added.

He said Mr. Kiroff "wanted something done about Tom Andreas . . . that . . . killed," because Mr. Andreas had been caught by police with 11 sticks of dynamite.

Witnesses said the dynamite came from Mr. Kiroff through Mr. Morell.

"He figured we were both involved in it," Mr. Morell said.

"We've got to get him done in," he quoted Mr. Kiroff as saying.



"I said, 'if you want something done, do it yourself.'"

Uranium.

An important element in Ontario's future.

The growing scarcity of fossil fuels requires that we put all energy resources to best use.

Ontario's most significant energy development is the increasing use of Canada's natural uranium to generate electricity. In addition to being a reliable means of producing electricity, it encourages the development of our country's own natural resources while decreasing dependency on other countries and on other resources such as coal, oil and natural gas. Another important benefit is that uranium provides the cleanest known method of thermal generation.

Although nuclear generating plants are more costly to build, this is moderated by the fact that fuel costs are lower than with other forms of thermal generation.

The transition to nuclear generation is a long-term proposition. Nuclear generating facilities require longer to build. "Heavy water" needed for operation of the reactors will be in short supply for some years until more facilities for the production of adequate supplies can be constructed.

Nonetheless, nuclear generation offers great promise for the future as demonstrated by the excellent performance of the Ontario Hydro Pickering Plant which is now providing approximately 15% of the electric energy made available in Ontario.

Although there is no shortage of electricity in Ontario it makes good sense to use it, and all our resources, wisely.

Kinettes Celebrate Anniversary

The Belleville Kinette Club held its 25th Anniversary Celebration at the Sun Valley Motor Hotel Sunday.

Attending the event were 60 Kinettes, among them 13 past presidents of the organization.

President Kay Quirt conducted a short meeting, and read a card of congratulation from the White Cane Club, the Kinettes' major service project.

After a buffet lunch, a singsong was led by life member Maude Sullin, assisted by Marg Hallam and Gladys Sheffield.

Six draws were won, by Marlene Parks, Peg Johnston, Mary Aikman, Linda Hultquist, Gladys Sheffield and Marie Lafferty.

25 Years of Memories

Looking over a scrapbook of Kinette activities through 25 years in Belleville at the Anniversary Luncheon last Sunday are Deanna Cannings, past president and convener of the events, Kay Quirt, president and convener, Art Duncan, guest speaker, and Ruth Follwell, past president.

Equal Rights Fight

OTTAWA (CP) — The women's liberation movement isn't really new, says Mrs. John McLean, president of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada (FWIC).

The institutes achieved federation in 1919, but women started doing things that had to be done long before that, she said in an interview.

It all began when Adelaide Hunter Hoodless of Hamilton lost her 18-month-old son because she didn't know milk should boil raw milk.

The anguished mother, determined to do all she could to help others and bring within reach of all women the education necessary to prevent similar tragedies, began a campaign for household science classes in schools.

From that evolved the idea for a women's institute, established in Stoney Creek, Ont., in February, 1897.

The organization was committed to "improving physical, intellectual and cultural conditions in the home and raising the standard of homemaking," early minutes of their meetings record.

These were rural women and with the help of farm organizations in a predominantly rural Canada the idea spread across the country.

In 1919 delegates from the provinces met in Winnipeg and the result was the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, with the blessing of the federal agriculture department.

Since then women's institutes have reached a national membership of 70,000 and a world-wide fellowship of eight million "countrywomen.

Now, with a growing number leaving the farms for urban life, the FWIC membership has levelled off at 37,000.

Mrs. McLean is a 47-year-old mother of three from Eureka, N.S., a Sunday-school teacher, church treasurer, 4-H leader and active in other organizations in Pictou County. She said the institute encourages members to take active part in everything.

"We're criticized by many as being an older women's organization," she said, "with some women's liberation groups regarding the institutes as outdated.

"We emphasize the importance of the family in our society. I think the women's institute has been women's lib for a long time, but it doesn't mean we went out and burned our bras and did all these other ridiculous things that they do. We've been fighting for equal rights, . . . It's old hat to us.

"If there's a job to fill, whether it be on a school board, a municipal council or as a member of the legislature, we train our women to be ready to take on any of these positions.

"If there is a need, we fill it."

Mrs. McLean, a soft-spoken, blue-eyed blonde who was elected president at the institutes' triennial convention gran, which ensures adequate in Banff last June, has been a member of the organization for more than 20 years.

For the next three years she will divide her time between the family dairy farm, the FWIC's national office here and visits to provincial organizations.

Asked the recent achievements of provincial institutes that Mrs. McLean takes pride in are:

—The Alexandria Solarium and Crippled Children's Hospital in Vancouver.

—Alberta's free radium treatment under the Canadian Cancer Society.

—A New Brunswick home for the aged.

—Mobile facilities of Prince Edward Island's health programs.

'Old Hat' to WI

Ann Landers

She'll Try Anything

Dear Ann Landers I don't know whether or not newspaper columnists have an unspoken agreement not to write on each other, but I do hope you will print this letter in the public interest. Why should a columnist to those household-hint writers that they print only suggestions which are practical and sensible? A lot of nutty women will try anything they see written up as a "work-saver."

My not-so-bright wife read in the paper that a good way to save time when making cracker crumbs is to put the whole box of crackers in a plastic bag and whir it with a car.

A rolling pin costs 5¢ cents. Our car cost $4,500. My wife asked me last night to please get the wide, 76-series tires because they would make better cracker crumbs. Knowing my wife as I do, I'm sure she will nag me until I get those new tires. We don't need new tires, Ann Landers. What do you suggest now?—Irritated in Yonkers

Dear Irk: Sorry, I've got all I can do to respond to readers against my advice. I can't handle beefs directed at other columnists. Why don't you write to Whatterneane? The next letter will give you an idea of what I'm up against at the moment.

Dear Ann Landers: It is 4:30 a.m. and I am boiling. My sister-in-law, an unmitigated fool-age of, just set the house in an uproar. I am visiting here from Fairbanks, Alaska.

About 2 a.m. this morning, all hell broke loose. I heard my brother-in-law yelling for me. It seems his wife Catherine had awakened during the night coughing and choking, clawing at the wide strips of adhesive tape that she had plastered over every which way across her mouth. When her husband finally succeeded in ripping off the tape, he took some of her lip with it. Here was a little bleeding but certainly no basmorrhage.

My brother-in-law was very upset and started to look for something to remove the adhesive mess left on Catherine's face. I offered him some lighter fluid—a trick I had learned in the army. Well, it must have stung a little and she screamed so loud I thought for sure the neighbors would call the police.

After we got her quieted down, I asked what in the world that tape was doing over her mouth anyway. She replied, "I read in Ann Landers's column that if a person tapes his mouth shut at night it will eliminate wrinkles.

Please tell me, Ann, did you give that advice? I can't believe it.—A Guest

Dear Guest: Yes, I did, and many readers wrote to say it works. Sorry about Catherine's lip, but she apparently put on much more tape than was necessary. And now, Bub, what kind of an idiot would suggest lighter fluid on a raw wound?

Dear Ann Landers: Please tell those middle-aged ladies with beautiful bodies to quit referring to "stretch marks" from childbirth as ugly. Usually they can help you how to get rid of them.

I am 25 years old and have three lovely children. I have stretch marks on my breasts as well as my abdomen and hips. I do not consider them ugly, and neither does my husband. They are the scars I bear as a result of having children. If you print my letter, it might help other women with stretch marks feel less ashamed.—Salt Lake Mama

Dear Mama: Here 'tis—and now take that and that, you gals out there who are ashamed of your stretch marks. They are your medals for motherhood. Cheer up.

Nutrition During Pregnancy

If a mother is malnourished while she is pregnant, her baby is deprived of nutrients necessary for its growth, reminds Consumers' Association of Canada. New studies indicate that severe restrictions of weight gain during pregnancy increase the risk that the baby will be born before the end of a full term pregnancy (premature) or full term but underdeveloped (immature). Successful Living

Reader Recalls Old Poem

Dr. Margaret Mead never evinces her words, nor does she now. While she is 100 percent against abortion, she considers that in our present society it is a necessary evil.

The reason is that we have failed to educate our young women about sex and to provide contraceptives for anyone who needs or wants it, and because we have failed to provide people with enough to eat.

She does not think that any woman should have to turn to abortion as a result of these failures; there never should be an unwanted child; and this is where the emphasis in education should lie — in agencies which will help women to make sure that they will never conceive an unwelcome babe.

Dear Doris: Can you bear with me?—an old woman 84 years of age, who should know better!

I am in an old folks' home. Sometimes we have little gatherings where each contributes a bit of entertainment. I recently bought of a short poem that I heard when I was a teenager and wondered if you might have something like it.

It was about an old maid taking a stroll through her orchard on a balmy summer evening, wishing she had a man. Why could she not have a man?

Just at that moment an owl, from the treetop above, gave a "Who-who -who-o." Looking up prayerfully the old maid said, "Who, my Lord? Why, anyone will do!"

If you can make my writing out you deserve a bonus. Hope you can trace the poem but I have my doubts.

Feel Guilty About Asking!

Dear Feel Guilty: Well, you don't need to. The story is a humorous one and others will enjoy it if we can find it. Over to you, readers.

Dear Doris: Thanks to the generosity of many people last year, we were able to cope with the demand for Belleville and Christmas cards, calendars, invitation paper lanterns and more items which made use of the lovely designs. Every bit of those cards generously sent by our friends are being used.

The Buddhists have a Light Festival, and the paper lanterns stitched by us are hung between the lights to set off the place. The children are thrilled.

Many cards are sent to Sunday School teachers working in faraway Christian churches, many of them situated on the Chins Indo-Burma border. We were able to contribute a stall each at the YWCA Annual Charity Sales, Mothers' Union Annual Sales and at the children's Christmas Tree Party.

This being a mission centre, we try to help the poorer members of our staff by keeping a small sick fund towards medical bills, and this has been made possible too, through your goodness.

Saw Lader, Christian Radio Audio Visual Centre, 82nd Street, Mandalay, Upper Burma.

I'm glad we helped. Readers please note: The C.R.A.V.C. will be glad of used cards again this year. Write in for details about how to package and mail them.

(If something is troubling you, there's help to be had. Write to Doris in care of this newspaper, for another stamp on your difficulty.)

'Our Lives Succeed Because We Try Harder'

Out of the common forge of single parenthood has been welded a strong Canadian organization, the One Parent Families Association.

Saturday, we looked at the function of the OPFA.

Today, we go a little deeper and look at the lives of five members.

Each of the single parents who talked with us shrinks at much peace of mind to membership in the OPFA.

All of them have found personal strength as a result of coping with loss, and have created better and closer relationships with their children.

They have in common forward-looking attitude that keeps them moving away from past unhappiness.

And they all still believe in the institution of marriage.

'I never went dancing when I was married'

"Not only do I think differently, I even look different two years after the divorce,' says Rose, a slim man in his forties.

"I used to be very conservative, but my clothes are becoming more colorful all the time. I love to dance now, too—they call me a whirlwind on the floor at OPFA dances. I never went dancing when I was married."

Rose was married for 23 years. He and his wife brought up five children, now ranging in age from 23 to 14 year old.

The oldest girl is married, the youngest boy lives with his mother, and one girl and two boys live with Ross.

"My ex-wife has remarried, and is very happy," Ross says. "Since we have each made new lives, we've become good friends again. We often talk on the telephone about the children who are on good terms with both of us."

Sounds like the ideal post-divorce situation, doesn't it? In many ways, it is, and Ross thinks he knows why.

"We have consistently been honest with each other family," he says. "Nothing has been hidden from them.

"Also, we've tried not to pass on bitterness to the children. That is very important, since there's bound to be bad feeling for a divorce."

Ross was left with an empty house to refurnish two years ago, and several debts to pay. Now financially secure again, he has decorated his home in warm and comfortable good taste.

"A number of things that I had left to my wife I find that I'm able to do," Ross says. "Not only decorating the house, but cooking after it. Of course, the kids help out."

The first few months Ross exhausted himself in overorganization of his life. Only since recuperating from illness has he learned to relax.

"We are organized," Ross recalls with a laugh, "that for six months we ate the same meals every week. Finally, the kids said if they had to eat a take-out chicken dinner one more Tuesday they'd die!"

Now they have a more flexible meal schedule, and all help with the cooking. They rely upon good-hearted friends for a supply of baked goods.

He and his children have become better friends since the divorce, and he talks about his dates with his sons. They are anxious for him to be happy, and approve of his active social life. Ross is on the OPFA executive and is busy with club activities three or four nights a week.

Is he dating with remarriage in mind?

"There's no doubt that a home is not the same without a mother," Ross admits. "Yes, for a variety of reasons I'd like to get married again.

"But you can be sure I won't rush into anything. There's a tendency to guard yourself after divorce, I think.

"My first marriage ended partially because we grew in different directions. I'll be careful to pick someone with similar interests this time round, because my next marriage will have to last the rest of my life."

'You end up feeling like a fifth wheel'

Lorne has five children too.

Separated from their mother for six months, he has custody of the two boys, aged 14 and eight years old.

The three girls, aged 13, 10 and three, live with their mother, and visit their father every second weekend. The boys visit their mother on alternating weekends, so that the children have two days together every week.

"The arrangement seems to be working out," Lorne says. At first, the children compared notes and tried to work out "deals." But they've settled into this system now.

"The boys and I have learned to keep house pretty well.

"I spend more time with my children now, and it shows in. Both boys have improved their marks in school. Disciplining is no problem with only two to care for!"

A former Air Force technician in his 30s, Lorne is studying at Loyalist College and working on weekends, preparing for a new life. He hopes to return to western Canada.

"I look to the future, living each day at a time," Lorne says. "I don't look back anymore than I have to."

Asked about his marriage, he is willing to analyze why it didn't last, but says he still doesn't have all the answers.

"We tried counselling," he says, "but it was too late. The only good it did was to make us more certain that separating was the best thing to do."

"I'm not against marriage, though," Lorne says. "But it will be a long time before I ever consider getting married again."

While he is single, he finds the OPFA a great help.

"The group is useful especially during this transitional period," Lorne says.

"With married couples, you tend to feel like a fifth wheel. You end up defensive and self-conscious about your status. It's much easier to mix with the other single parents at the club.

"However, I'd never let the club take over my whole life. It is only meant to help me get on my feet again."

'Divorce is not glamorous. It's hurtful and lonely'

"It's not as glamorous as people think," she says about getting divorced. "It's hurtful and lonely. I've hated every minute of it."

Separated from her husband since a few months before her baby was born, Margaret is waiting now for her divorce.

She says she is glad she has her son. "He gives me a reason to go on."

Margaret worries about the effect that her single status may have upon her son when he grows older. She expects to rely upon her brothers-in-law to provide him with some sort of father image, unless she remarries.

She is living now with her widowed mother, but intends to move to an apartment in the spring if she can afford it. If she can manage financially, she won't go out to work.

"I don't think mothers should work," Margaret says. "In fact I think wives working has contributed to the rising divorce rate.

"A man wants his woman to be dependent upon him. If she's independent from him - as working women tend to be — then the marriage is apt to suffer."

Although she is in her 20s Margaret's views on love and marriage are traditional.

"A wife's role is to make her husband happy. A woman shouldn't need to find important in the same way a man does. Her importance comes from her relationship with her husband."

Margaret worked for the first part of her four-year long marriage and attributes its break-up to that and many other reasons.

One reason she gives is that she and her husband "went steady" from the age of 15.

"We'd sometimes quarrel and break up, but never long enough to really get to know anybody else. We always got back together out of a sense of security.

"I don't think you can be as sure of your marriage if you've only gone out with one person. You learn about yourself in your relationships with different people, and the more you know about yourself, the better chance your marriage has."

Margaret is learning a lot about herself these days.

"I am much stronger and more realistic, since I've been on my own," she says. "I am also more tied to my baby than I would be were I married."

Not ever being able to sleep late is just one of the small irritations of single parenthood.

Another is "the social ostracization she feels.

"My old married friends don't want to see much of me anymore," she says. "They regard me as a threat. I guess.

"If only they knew that the last thing in the world a divorced person could want to do is to break up anyone else's marriage."

Margaret joined several clubs soon after her separation, but found that the one where she is the most comfortable is the OPFA.

"We all know that one of the problems in marriages that end is that partners didn't listen to each other. Now, when we talk, we really listen to what other people are saying."

'I'm twice as happy single'

"I am twice as happy now," says Lynn, after three years of separation following six years of marriage.

"I like myself a lot better, and have more self-confidence."

Lynn has a daughter who is six and a son, four. The three live in a house Lynn rented in July, after some trouble with landlords.

"They think that women can't take care of a house properly, and they worry that we won't pay the rent reliably — like there is a husband. Luckily, the owner of this house knew my parents, or I'd probably still be looking."

Lynn's marriage was so unhappy in its final years that she finds bringing up the children much easier without her husband's "influence. Her daughter became emotionally upset soon after the separation, but with the help of a Toronto play therapist is now a healthy and well-adjusted child.

She and her brother are close in their support, as children without fathers tend to be.

Lynn, who receives mother's allowance, tried working for a while, but found she was too tired at night to give the children the love and care they needed.

"I decided that their welfare came first," she says. "Since I don't drink or smoke, or have a car, I'm able to live on the allowance adequately."

She has learned to live simply, and has a hobbies sewing and reading. Her love of books has led her to a two-afternoon a week job at a nearby public school library. She takes her son with her.

Never being away from the children can sometimes get to be down, and times like those, she hires a babysitter and puts away for a weekend.

"On-else I just grit my teeth and get on with it!"

She does have a little, but her dates are required to pay the babysitter, or she could not afford to go out.

Like Margaret, she finds that her friendships with married women have dropped off.

"You can't ask a married girl to go out in the evening with you, or the husbands are suspicious. Many of them view me as a threat, because I am separated. I think I'll grow their wives funny ideas about freedom.

"The attitude of people towards single parents seems to be 'God forbid you should be happy. Well, I still know I've done the best thing."

'I can't live in the past'

Selma is a widow.

She has worked for most of the eight years since her husband died in an accident, and left her with two daughters to care for.

Like other single mothers, she suffered discrimination in her job seeking.

"Employees are reluctant to hire us because they're sure we'll be away from work when the kids are sick. Well, our absentee rate is no higher than anyone else's."

Early in her widowhood, Selma discovered that the only way to recover from the shock of being alone was to keep herself busy helping other people. She worked with the Mental Health Association and the Cancer Society as a volunteer.

Cancer Society as a volunteer.

"I found that ordinary women's groups were uncomfortable for me," she husbands and family life says, "Conversation about excludes widows."

Now Selma spends much of her time with the people in the OPFA. She is well-equipped to deal with the problems of single parents.

"People sometimes think that widows 'have it easy' — being left with insurance money and pleasant memories. But that's not true.

"A partner's death doesn't mean automatically the marriage had been a perfect one. A widow simply learns to remember only the good times. And that's what every single parent should do.

"I talk about my husband to the girls so that they have a good picture of what their father was like. My memory of him is still clear, made more vivid by the way the girls resemble him.

Abortion 'Sell Out'

CHATHAM, Ont. (CP) Dr. Heather Morris, a Toronto gynecologist and president of the National-Alliance for Life, said Wednesday abortion on demand is the ultimate sell-out of women's rights.

She told a meeting here studies show that the biggest group in North America supporting casual abortion are "white, non - Catholic, Anglo - Saxon men," she said.

Dr. Morris said she finds this understandable because they have everything to gain from the arrangement.

Dr. Morris said there is no correlation between unwanted pregnancies and battered babies. One study has shown that 80 per cent of battered children were wanted and the result of planned pregnancies.

But she said there is reason for concern in the fact that the incidence of battered children has doubled since Canadian legal reform made abortion easier to obtain.

"If you seek a violent solution to social problems, it breeds violence," she said.

October War Has Made Anwar Sadat Arab Hero

CAIRO (Reuter) — The October war with Israel has turned Egyptian President Anwar Sadat from a man with a reputation for indecision into one of the Arab world's most popular figures.

He is the architect of the major psychological victory scored by Egypt in the war — the new faith the country found in itself and its ability to stand up to Israel, a faith which was unshaken when the military situation took a turn for the worse and Israel broke through to the west bank of the Suez canal.

Since the ceasefire, the Egyptian leader's problem has been to keep up the momentum gained by the surprise assault on the Bar-Lev line, when even Egypt's Soviet backers are believed to have been kept only partly informed.

The Egyptians' new-found national self-confidence has been strong enough for his people as a whole to give Sadat at least the benefit of the doubt when for the first time in 25 years Egypt talked directly to Israel. The desert-meeting of their generals to discuss cease-fire arrangements last November would have been unthinkable previously.

One sign that life was returning to normal was the reopening of the universities, delayed for a month by the hostilities. Students in the past have been among the most dangerous critics of what they saw as indecisive leadership and had frustered demonstrations in favor of war.

Since they went back to their studies at the end of November, only one demonstration has been reported — in Alexandria. Diplomats say it was a peaceful affair but the students called for a new war against Israel.

Sadat set the political and military stage for the war with all the canny skill of a tried and tested conspirator who plotted to rid Egypt of King Farouk and British influence more than 20 years ago.

Egyptian officials especially admire the way he left it to the country's comparatively liberated womanhood and other sectors of public opinion to answer the youthful ardor of Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi, while he himself worked behind the scenes to arrest relations with the wilier King Feisel of Saudi Arabia.

Gaddafi, 31, came to Cairo last summer intending to talk East into an immediate and total merger with his oil-rich but sparsely populated republic.

The two countries had agreed formally to merge on Sept. 1, but the rhetoric was shelved indefinitely after the diametrically opposed ideas of the two leader and informed Egyptian opinion were aired in public meetings here.

While Gaddafi waited to see Sadat in Cairo, the Egyptian leader was off on a secret mission to Saudi Arabia, which subsequently became the leading proponent of the "oil war" against Israel's Western sympathizers.

Sadat thus won to his side a powerful and wealthy monarch who had felt deep distrust for the late president Gamal Abdel Nasser. He also renewed diplomatic links with Jordan.

Sadat, leader of one-third of the world's 100 million Arabs, also took the trouble to visit the oil-rich Gulf sheikdoms once virtually ignored by Egypt's policy-makers.

On the explosive issue of who should speak for Palestine at the peace conference, Egypt has been careful to take account of Jordan's sensibilities, even though the Arab summit meeting in Algeria last month rejected King Hussein's view that he should represent the Palestinians.

At the summit meeting Sadat won the acknowledged hero. The summit endorsed the new solidarity among Arabs and confirmed the Egyptian leader's new status.

CBC Programming Changing

TORONTO (CP) — Knowlton Nash, CBC director of television information programming, said Monday the CBC's days of "smorgasbord programming" are ending.

He told members of the Empire Club of Toronto the broadcaster has decided that for years the publicly owned network enjoyed a near monopoly in much of the country and as a result had to offer programs ranging from "Beverly Hillbillies to Cinderellas or from Abbot and Costello to Man Alive."

However, from now on, the choice of 25 to 30 television will be the norm for television viewers in Canada, he said.

"With the TV option revolution, smorgasbord programming days are ending . . . for a public broadcasting system in this country."

Mr. Nash also lashed out at critics of the CBC who say it is dominated by United States programming, that it is failing behind the opposition in current affairs, and is not measuring up to foreign networks.

He said CBC's general programming is 75 per cent Canadian and its information programming 40 percent homegrown. The CBC provides more information programming apart from newscasts than any other network on the continent, he said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Leonard F. [illegible] 57, creator and executive producer of the television program Hawaii Five-O, has died [illegible] heart surgery.

The popular CBS television series, now in its sixth year, is filmed in Hawaii with Jack Lord as star.

Freeman, a past president of the Writers Guild of America and the Producers Guild of America, had written more than 300 television plays. He also wrote and produced the Clint Eastwood film Hang 'Em High.

His production credits include The Untouchables, Route 66, Mr. Novak and a number of anthology shows.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Jesuit priest who claims to have exorcised a California family attacked by the devil, said Monday night there are others "who belong in our care."

Rev. Karl Fatsell, director of the Catholic Russian Centre and pastor of Our Lady of Fatima Church in San Francisco, was interviewed after participating in a television discussion on exorcism with four other priests.

Father Fatzelt said he disagreed with another member, Rev. Edmund Rvan, executive vice-president of Georgetown University, who said "99.999 per cent (of people) on to infinity should not worry about being possessed" by demons.

The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Francisco has confirmed that a young couple and their two-year-old son underwent a solemn exorcism last fall. The unidentified couple say they succeeded in repulsing the devil.

Engineer Supported 6-5

Bridge St. Widening Approved

The reconstruction of Bridge Street West from Highland Ave. to Wellington St. should be a three-lane facility with boulevards.

That is the recommendation of city engineer Wilbur Purcell that Monday saw city council approval on a slim 6-5 recorded vote.

The reconstruction project still has to go to the Ontario Municipal Board but even with OMB approval the work would not get under way until the spring of 1975.

The city's plan to reconstruct Bridge Street West to a three-lane facility has met with strong resident opposition from ratepayers who fear the dangers of increased speeds and object to the loss of stately shade trees now lining the artery.

The reconstruction proposal last June was the subject of an Ontario Municipal Board hearing at city hall, the result of which was an interim decision calling for more discussions following completion of road work on Dundas Street West and on Sidney Street.

Many residents felt that Bridge Street did not require widening and that there was no need for the street being upgraded as an arterial route.

But new traffic counts taken in November last year following completion of construction on Dundas and Sidney Street, indicated an increase of traffic on Bridge Street in excess of that projected in the original report and, according to the city engineer, the projected traffic increase would call for a four-lane roadway.

However, it was felt that property disruption would be too extensive with a four-lane design.

The city engineer, following consideration of the project ordered by city council, believes that the advantages of a three-lane facility over a two-lane facility and the use

Dangerous Driving Charge Stands Up

A 18-year-old Belleville man was found guilty of dangerous driving when he appeared before Judge J. L. Clendenning in provincial court yesterday.

Manuel Tsichlas, 19, of 49 Bridge Street West, was arrested Nov. 23 after the car he was driving crashed into a hydro pole at the intersection of Dundas Street East and Albert Street. Police said it was high-speed chase by police.

Court was told yesterday, that Tsichlas and four companions who were travelling in a car driven by Tsichlas were shaken by police along Burnham, Bridge, Bleecker, Dundas and Albert Streets early in the morning of Nov. 23, at speeds that at times approached 65 miles an hour.

At one point in the chase, the Tsichlas vehicle failed to negotiate a turn north on Albert Street from Dundas Street; crossed the northwest sidewalk of the intersection and came to rest in a hedge. The car then reversed direction and tried to return to Dundas Street, when it spun out of control and struck the hydro pole on the south side of the intersection.

The police car that was following the Tsichlas vehicle was unable to stop when Tsichlas drove back onto Dundas Street and rammed into the rear end of the car after it struck the pole.

At the time of the accident, damage was estimated to be $300 to the police cruiser and $1,000 to the Tsichlas car, a 1973 Monte Carlo.

Tsichlas had pleaded not guilty to the charge, told the court that he was not aware that he was travelling at speeds until just before the accident.

Judge Clendenning commanded Tsichlas, out of custody, for sentence Jan. 29.

Meeting Seeks Solution To Old Lease Problems

TYENDINAGA RESERVE — A meeting to discuss the Shannonville lease — a colonial-era document which today ranks as one of Canada's real estate idiosyncracies - is scheduled this week between federal officials and the reserve council here, says Quinte Mohawk chief William Brant.

The discussion could initiate action toward resolving the dilemma for both Mohawks and Shannonville residents which the lease has posed in modern times, indicated Chief Brant.

The meeting, scheduled some time ago, will see Mohawk councillors talking over the situation with officials of the Indian affairs department Thursday.

Hope was what will happen from this is "that we can decided one way or the other what the reserve band and the government want to do," he said.

If a mutual viewpoint is reached, discussions can begin with Shannonville tenants involved in the leasing situation, he said.

Chief Brant said he was hopeful a satisfactory arrangement could be reached "as soon as possible" in fairness to both the Mohawks and their neighbors.

The passage of time created when the original lease was granted in the early 1800s permitting a white settler to build a mill on 200 acres of reserve land near the mouth of the Salmon River, granted for 99 years, it charged a yearly rental of 30 barrels of flour. As more settlers arrived, land parcels were sub-leased off the original document. There now are about 30 property owners holding leases, in later years the flour rental was paid by a canning factory that replaced the mill.

As Shannonville grew into a hamlet — now flanking Highway 2 — it drifted under the municipal administration of Tyendinaga township, a township formed from surrender of reserve lands.

About two years ago the Mohawks began the search for an undated solution to the situation more realistically in keeping with modern times, going nowhere.

He said long-range plans called for extension of the street past the city limits and into Sidney township to meet Wallbridge Road.

Also new underground services were required for the street and there was just no room under the present roadway.

In outlining the disadvantages of the three-lane design he recommended were said to be flexibility in the use of the street as a six lane facility with parking on one side now and later, as traffic increased to a three-lane artery without parking.

Boulevards would remove pedestrianism from the effects of vehicular traffic, would provide better access to driveways and provide space for snow storage purposes.

Mayor Robin Jeffrey commended the city engineer for his detailed report on the Bridge Street widening project, setting out the reasons why he felt a three-lane artery was necessary.

"There just does not seem to be any alternative," she said.

But Alderman John Stock took a different view claiming he still failed to see why a three-or four-lane roadway was required through a residential district.

Especially since the roadway came to a blind end to the west.

The alderman felt that with the widening of DundasStreet, the widening of Dundas Street, the construction of an arterial road had been served.

To despoil areas of old Belleville was wrong, unless absolutely necessary, he said.

Aldermen Stu Meeks, Joe Cox and Roger Porter also were opposed to widening to three lanes.

But Alderman Jean Smith felt that something had to be done with Bridge Street now. Merely resurfacing was not feasible.

Alderman Jack Ireland, chairman of the city traffic committee, didn't agree that Bridge Street was just a road

Water and Sewer Meeting Thursday

Originally scheduled for a week ago, a special meeting of city council will be held Thursday to consider provincial proposals for an area water and sewer service.

The meeting, scheduled for 10 a.m., is expected to take up most of the day. Under consideration will be proposals to serve parts of Sidney and Thurlow township with water and sewers extensions from Belleville.

A report from the city manager on possible sewer extension has been received by council members and will be considered in camera before Thursday's meeting. Neil Britton, manager of the public utilities, has also prepared a report for possible extension of water service to the adjoining areas outside the city limits.

Promotion Firm Is Back To Push Circus in May

By LENNY WILLIAMSON
Staff Reporter

If you plan to take your children to the circus in May, buy your tickets at the door.

That's the only way your money will get to the charity the circus is supposed to support.

That avowed friend of underprivileged children, Ian M. Garden (Ontario Incorporated) is in town again, after promoting a sparsely attended Dec. 4 Christmas show for underprivileged children held in Centennial Secondary School.

This time the Toronto promoters are selling a circus to appear at the Memorial Arena in May. The service organization sponsored is the Garden Brothers' circus is the Belleville Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Telephone solicitation of businessmen began last week from six telephones installed in the Jaycee's office above Roluf's on Front St. One businessman was asked to pay $100 for a block of tickets to send 20 underprivileged children to the circus. When calls are made to private residences, the person answering is asked to buy tickets for his or her own children, in the hope that he has no children, the pitch is made for the underprivileged.

Garden Brothers' circus is a familiar in Belleville. It has appeared here for years, sponsored by the Kinsmen Club of Quinte and once by the Jaycees.

National headquarters of the Knights last year ordered local branches to cease operating Ian M. Garden and its circus.

"It was giving us a bad name," said Don Bland of the Knights' executive. "Only in some places were putting pressure on people to buy tickets in the name of the Knights of Columbus."

Last year, said Mr. Bland, receipts from ticket sales to called $13,000. The Knights got $1,300 of this money for the charity they support—the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society.

"There's little return on the money collected," said Mr. Bland, citing this as another reason for the Knights' cancellation of all Ian M. Garden, and similar, promotions.

Those who buy tickets for the works' cause get no receipt for income tax purposes. The promotion is completely legal, because the promoter delivers on his promise — he always gives the entertainment (circus or Christmas party) for which he sold tickets. But the operation does not meet the government's qualifications for a non-profit, charitable enterprise.

"The money came from the sale of adult tickets at the door," said the Knights' Don Bland. "All the money you get from children's tickets goes to the promoter. On the day of the circus I booked off work and made sure I had about 20 men working the arena, selling tickets to parents who brought their kids. That's where our money came from.

And I remember every kid who turned up got a ticket whether he could pay for it or not."

Bill Lynch, the Knight who organized the finances for the circus, outlined how Ian M. Garden and similar promo ters operate.

The promoter first seeks out a sponsoring organization — a local service club usually — under whose umbrella the promoter works in each community. A contract is signed, under which, said Mr. Lynch, the sponsoring club can't lose money. But it can't make money, either, unless local members hustle sales on their own.

The sponsoring club gives the promoter premises in which to install telephones. The sponsoring club also supplies tickets, arranges publicity and advertising and provides transportation for the underprivileged children for whom the circus is intended.

The promoter pays all other expenses — telephones, local people hired to make calls, deliver the tickets and pick up the money, arena rental, city circus license of $100, travelling expenses, and performance fees for the circus.

The promoter keeps 40 per cent of the money raised in the advance sale of tickets, said Mr. Lynch. The remaining 60 per cent goes into the bank account of the sponsor after the performance.

"The main cost to Belleville to handle advance sales takes his 40 per cent from the workers minute they come back to the office with the ticket money," said Mr. Lynch. "Last year, the promoter's daily expenses during the three-month pre-sale totalled $8,000."

After the performance, the promoter deducts additional expenses from the money deposited in the bank. Then the promoter and the sponsoring club split the remainder on a 50-50 basis.

"Sales at the door is the big take," confirmed Mr. Lynch.

The promoter is also allowed to keep the money it makes in door sales circus day. The Knights always deposited this money in another, separate bank account. If members of the sponsoring club themselves make private advance ticket sales, the club is allowed to keep the first $5 per cent, before turning the remaining 60 per cent over to the circus bank account for later settlement.

If the Knights hadn't changed its policy, I'd have favored going ahead with the circus again this year," said Mr. Lynch. "For man-hours expended, it's pretty good pay."

Both Mr. Bland and Mr. Lynch scorned the suggestion that promotion schemes are a "lazy man's way of raising charitable dollars".

"Our members worked as hard for the circus as they did for any fund-raising drive of our own," said Mr. Bland.

"When I ran the circus I made sure the Salvation Army, Ontario School for the Deaf and the various departments got all the tickets they needed for their children, and we saw ers the money came back to the office with the ticket to them. We really worked the day of the circus to make sure every kid got in.

Once, when the circus was held at Zwick's Island, the Knights ferried kids over to get the children there.

Both Mr. Bland and Mr. Lynch said the organization, got a larger cut of the profits from Ian M. Garden than from other promoters they have sponsored over the years.

To make money from sponsorship of a promotion firm's entertainment, you have to know the ropes.

This was confirmed by Jaycee's president, Glen Wardell.

The secret is that everyone in the organization knows what is going on, he said.

"We've had really good results."

Mr. Wardell said the local Jaycees have had representations for sponsorship of Ian M. Garden from nine other clubs in different centres, including Lions, Rotoroughs, St. Thomas, London and St. Catharines. Ian Garden Brothers circus performs in 120 places a season, giving from one to three performances in each place. It is presented to give three performances in Belleville, if ticket sales warrant. The Jaycees hope to sell 3,000 to 4,000 tickets in the three months of advance ticket sales. Prices for admission — enough to fill the arena twice. Price of tickets, he said, is $3.50 for an adult, $2.50 for a child and $8.00 for a family of up to five people.

"We have had a really good response so far," said Mr. Wardell. "We have compiled a list of donors from past sponsorship of the circus."

Not "knowing the ropes" was hinted at by service club executives as the reason Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 99, installed at the box office with Christmas parties.

Ian M. Garden promoted most successful sponsorship in Legion Hall. The Legion was given $200 for use of its name and premises. Other clubs who were variously estimated at from $50 to $100 each. Only 20 underprivileged children showed up at the performance, all of them taken there by one social worker. No tickets were in evidence.

The Jaycees intend to ask the support of the city's Financial Appeals Review Board for clearance of the Garden Brothers' circus in May.

Chairman George Thompson, manager of Bell Canada here, was out of town and unavailable for comment. But a city businessman, former member of the board, said it had turned down requests for approval in the past.

"In the past he said, "when the Knights of Columbus sponsored the circus, I complained to Magr. P.J. Sullivan. If my small voice was heard at all, it was heard at national headquarters. I hope it's still under the policy."

At Christmas, when Ian M. Garden and his promotion firm were soliciting the holiday trade, Mayor Jeffrey called Better Business Bureau and the Toronto police's morality squad's head warned the public.

They have created a business for themselves," said Police Inspector Ross Stewart. "A small amount goes to charity and the rest goes to the pockets of the promoters."

The BBB warned against donating to telephone solicitors. It advised donors to give only to charities that could issue receipts valid for income tax purposes. Only reputable, government approved charities can issue such a receipt. Ian M. Garden (Ontario Incorporated) can't.

Residents Request Action

Residents of the Harvest Crescent area in the city's Glenaden housing subdivision are unhappy with a recurring flooding condition which they want somebody to do something about.

A.T. Hallam, 35 Harvest Crescent told city council Monday that residents have waited for more than a year

Boys' Club Proposal Outlined

Is there scope in Belleville for a branch of the Boys' Club of Canada?

The question was put before Rotarians Monday by Charles D. Howes, regional director of the organization's Central region, based in Toronto. Mr. Howes said the clubs were open to boys and girls aged seven to 17 providing opportunities for them to grow and develop their interests, a well as establishing rapport with adults.

Area Vancouver native said that "just being yourself" is necessary for the young, but getting assistance with school relative to the adult world too, to older individuals besides parents whose influence would stand them in good stead in later life.

There was no intention, said Mr. Howes, of conflicting with existing organizations, but if the club considered establishing a group here, the Boys' Club of Canada organization was available to help.

Getting kids off the streets was one thing, said Mr. Howes, but what is important is what happens to them after that.

Whether it was stamp collecting, or basketball, or getting assistance with school work, or the creative aspects of leisure-time activities - these were the needs of young people today — and he thought they always had been.

As a club brochure puts it,"The Boys' Club is a place to do things, a place where there are all kinds of instructional and social activities.

Airman Identified

The Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police has released the name of the Trenton airman who was killed when his motorcycle hit a car Sunday.

Private Gregory Warren Johnson, 20, originally from Stoney Creek Ont., was killed on Pte. Johnson had been walking east on the roadside of Highway 2, near the main gate to the base, when the accident occured at 1:30 a.m.

Speed Limit Is Reduced

Avondale Road in the city's north end is considered unsafe to have a 25-mile-an-hour speed limit.

The reduced speed limit was approved Monday by city council on recommendation of the city traffic and light committee.

Reasoning for the reduced speed limit is the special characteristics of the street, the number of children and the absence of sidewalks.

The traffic committee recommendation came following a complaint from area residents.

Art Film Series Begins Saturday

The only work of any importance is "simulation," says Peter Brockelsby when he speaks of a program of experimental and avante garde films which has been interest ing initiated.

Through a monthly series of showings at the Corby Public Library, sponsored by the Belleville Arts Council, the Quinte artist hopes to stimulate interest in films in Belleville.

The first, in,what he expects will be a year-long program, will be shown Saturday, Jan. 26 at 7 p.m.

Mr. Brockelsby didn't begin by planning to show films to the public. Rather, he said, he began to admit, he wanted to immerse himself in films for his own artistic research, and those were mainly to provide stimulus for his own work with constructions and multi-medium, two dimensional painting.

"I'm not really a collector, viat," he says. "I mean that in the sense that I don't see objectives and goals of others as a limit. I don't believe in the collective artistic community. Everyone should find his own stimulation."

But his quickly developed, strong involvement in short films and those of the Dadaists have moved him to set up the monthly programs. "I hope to spark interest," he says.

"He expands on the levels of interest the showings are geared to satisfy.

"First, there are those who have not been involved with the arts. I'm not saying they're artists, but that they can be artful if exposed to other stimuli."

He feels it is the second level he belongs in. "There are those that are either just starting as artists, or are interested in collecting.

"Thirdly, there are those that are involved already, but attending films can be a fresh stimulus to their own work."

Personally, Brockelsby expects to benefit from the series and is hoping others will.

Following are the four National Film Board of Canada film packs that will be shown this Saturday:

—Tchout-chou, color, surrealistic animation produced by Pierre Moretti with animation provided by Jana B. Subert.

—Ballet Adagio, a Norman McLaren 19 minute film of a ballet performance by David Adams and Lois Fuller, originally choreographed by Russian Asaf Messerer, to the music of Rachmaninoff. For the film, Rachmaninoff's music has been arranged by Alhionot's Adagio.

—Street Musique, by Ryan Larkin whose film Walking Stick received acclaim for a short subjects Academy Award in 1970.

—Evolution, produced, designed and animated by Caldwell Mills. The story involves man's early beginnings, began rather quickly.

Sketching the Show

Although David Brockelsby won't be running the projector, he has taken it upon himself to sketch the posters for advertising the first of a monthly series of short experimental and avante garde film showings at the Corby Public Library. The showings, sponsored by the Quinte Arts Council ,will kick off Saturday, Jan. 26 at 7 p.m.

Esposito Consistent

MONTREAL—(CP) — Centre Phil Esposito of Boston Bruins continued to lead the National Hockey League individual scoring race today, but for the first time this season he had dipped below his goal-a-game pace.

Going into tonight's game in St. Louis against the Blues, Esposito had 41 goals in 42 games and 86 points in all.The Boston-St. Louis clash was one of three games scheduled, with Californias Golden Seals visiting New York Islanders in another, and the high-flying Philadelphia Flyers in Vancouver against the lowly Canucks in the third.

But while he is off his goal-a-game pace today, Esposito remained the only player to occupy the same position among the league's top scorers today that he held one year ago.

After 42 games last season, Esposito led the race with 66 points and 29 goals. Three other players among the top 10 this season were also in that group one year ago.

Statistics released by the NHL today, comparing the 1973-74 and this season for the current leaders, show that defencemen Bobby Orr of Boston, runner-up to Esposito today, is 30 points ahead of his total of one year ago. Orr now has 74 points, including 21 goals, while last year he had 11 goals and 44 points after missing 14 games because of a knee injury.

The next best advance is by centre Norm Ullman of Toronto Maple Leafs who is in a ninth-place tie with centre Jacques Lemaire of Montreal Canadiens. Ullman has 18 goals and 43 points, a 24-point increase over last year when he had missed 13 games through injury at this point in the schedule.Lemaire, on the other hand, was second last season with 66 points, including a league-leading 32 goals. He now has 17 goals and 68 points.

Ken Hodge, Boston, 31-32—63 (33-27—50); Richard Martin, Buffalo Sabres, 22-35—57 (27-30—50); Dennis Hextall, Minnesota North Stars, 19-41—60 (18-28—46); Bill Goldsworthy, Minnesota, 27-22—49 (15-15—30); Norm Robert, Buffalo, 15-34—49 (38-30—68); Brad Park, New York Rangers, who also missed 20 games one year ago through injury, 14-35—49 (7-21—28).

At the same time last season the top 10 read: Esposito, 66 points; Lemaire and Stan Mikita of Chicago Black Hawks, 66 points; Robert and Bobby Clarke, Philadelphia, 57 points; Perreault, Buffalo, 55 points; Jean Ratelle, New York Rangers, and Jim Pappin, Chicago, 51 points; Hodge, Frank Mahovlich, Montreal, Syl Apps, Pittsburgh Penguins, and Rod Gilbert of the Rangers, 50 points each.

Bernie Parent of Philadelphia recorded his ninth shutout of the season last week and the Flyers have a league-leading goals-against average of 2.36. Second is Chicago with a 2.19 average.

When Pittsburgh beat the Flyers 5-3 in Philadelphia last Sunday night, it was the most goals given up by Parent in a game this season.

Due to a foul-up in the league schedule, only three games were played in the Gas House Hockey league last night, as opposed to the usual four. Mead Johnson came up with a 3-0 win over Stanley Structures, Stewart Warner downed the Yardmen 7 - 2, and Constellation tied Rollins Lumber 3 - 3.

Seven different players shared in the Stewart Warner scoring. Dominic Lentini, Rick Yuck, Randy Carmichael, Rick Meeres, Ken Tracey, Brian McQuaid, and Charlie Nesterovski each scored once.

Scoring for the Yardmen were Chuck Kemp, Doug Thompson, and Doug Mac Donald.

Twin Defeats For Loyalist

Sharon Cornell's Loyalist College women's basketball team dropped a pair of games on the weekend at Algonquin College, Ottawa.

The Loyalist team plays at home, Saturday, February 2 when Cambrian College of Sudbury, St. Lawrence of Kingston and Ottawa's Algonquin will be the visitors.

Plane in Stitches

Belleville Eagles' forward Ralph Plane is in stitches but there's no humor involved. Playing hockey the only way he knows...all out...in Brantford Sunday, Ralph caught a skate in the mouth during Eagles' 6-3 win. Hauled off to hospital for repairs, he returned to the game in time to see his mates chalk up an important OHA Senior A League win.

Housecleaning At Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Coley Hall, acting president of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League says both the general manager and assistant manager of the club must be fired.

Hall, who runs the Canucks from his winter home in Hawaii, said in a telephone interview that he will soon recommend the move at a directors' meeting.

His comments followed statement Friday by general manager Hal Laycoe and assistant general manager Bud Polle.

Hall repeated a telephone statement he made Friday that there must be a housecleaning—"this club should be run as a business but it never has been."

He said that once changes were made, he would no longer be involved with the club.

Hall said coach Phil Maloney, appointed a week ago after Bill McCreary was fired, was "totally responsible" for running the club. Hall ordered the dismissal of McCreary.

He added that anything Laycoe now did must first be checked with himself or American owner Tom Scallon, now debarred from the Canucks' board, pending appeal of a four-year prison term for theft of $3 million.

On Friday, Polle said he couldn't work with Laycoe.

"I told Hal in his face," he said, "He asked me for my resignation, but I said I had no intention of resigning. You only resign when you know you've done a bad job."

"I'm sure I can work with Phil (Maloney) and the owners, but not with Mr. Laycoe. I've tried it for several months; now I've thrown him the ball."

Laycoe was coach of the Canucks for two years when Polle was general manager. His coaching contract was not renewed. Laycoe then took over as general manager when Illness forced Polle to step down.

Laycoe would not comment on Polle's statements.

Goalie Gary Smith, who started in all but seven of 44 games this season, refused to go to Chicago to play with the Canucks on Sunday.

Earlier, Smith was critical of the management's situation and said it was difficult to play in "such an unbelievably screwed up atmosphere."

Anne Acton Loses

Toronto Rinks Are Undefeated

SARNIA (CP) —Two Toronto rinks are among four undefeated foursomes after play Monday in the Southern Ontario Curling Association championships.

Thea Lange, Toronto Tam Heather, won 8-5 over Lynn Bell of Midland then defeated Nina Mutch of Toronto Humber Highland 7-6 to enter the A division second final along with Sue Merry of Toronto, Cricket, Skating and Curling Club who opened with an 11-10 extra-end win over Ann Hanna of Sarnia and defeated Anne Acton of Belleville's Quinte club 9-6.

Also in the A division semi-final Kate Service of Galt who beat Shirley Parker of Toronto 8-5.

In the B division Marilyn Lemieux, Curtis, who has been with previous NHL service with Montreal Canadiens, Los Angeles Kings, and St. Louis Blues has been with Cincinnati Swords of the American Hockey League. He was assigned to the Rangers' AHL affiliate at Providence.

First-round losers met later in opening play of the B division. Mary Smith of Dundas, who lost 11-2 to Lang in the first round, rebounded with a 12-4 win over Jenkinson to eliminate the Preston Falls rink.

Yl Ferguson of Bracebridge, 7-1 loser to Dickson in the first series, was eliminated by a 12-2 loss to Parker. Hanna defeated Viola Braden of Keene 11-5 in the other series and Alice Miles of Windsor, a 10-6 loser to Humber Highland earlier recovered for a 10-3 win over the Bell rink from Midland.

The A division champion will be declared today. B and C winners will be known Wednesday morning. All three flight winners advance to the Ontario championship at Hamilton Feb. 2-5.

Finley Cools It

OAKLAND (AP) — In an attempt to cool reports of a possible sale of his Oakland Athletics, owner Charles O. Finley says the world champion baseball team is "no closer to being sold than five years ago."

John Hayes, an advertising executive, said Friday his Oakland-based group has been discussing the sale with Finley since October. He said the group was planning to submit an offer soon.

Finley, who has mentioned a $15-million price tag, said Monday he met with Hayes on only one occasion in November—and told him the Athletics were not for sale.

"However," Finley added, "I told him if he really loved the club it would cost him X number of dollars."

Except for one phone call to verify the price, the Oakland owner said he has heard nothing from Hayes and added:

"I personally do not believe he can put a group together to purchase this club. I don't care whether I sell or not. I'm going to unload the Tams and Seals and that could be enough."

Fines Total $700

Watson Pays the Penalty

MONTREAL (CP) — Veteran defenseman Bryan Watson of St. Louis Blues, under indefinite suspension for manhandling linesman Bob McLaren in a Jan. 16 National Hockey League game, has been fined $500 and given a retroactive three-game suspension, league president Clarence Campbell announced Monday.

Watson, a member of Pittsburgh Penguins when the incident occurred, was traded to the Blues the same night, but had been unable to play for his new club until his case was settled by Campbell.

However, the Blues have played three games without Watson since the altercation, and he will be free to play his first game for them tonight when they play Boston Bruins in St. Louis.

Watson became embroiled in a fight with forward Dan Maloney of Los Angeles Kings. The pair fought briefly until the linesmen separated them.

"Linesman McLaren had hold of Watson, who when he was clear of Maloney, wrestled the linesman to the ice," Campbell's fine said.

The NHL president said that Watson had seized the linesman by the shirt with both hands when the pair had regained their footing and had then thrown McLaren to the ice.

Watson had then shoved McLaren on the chest with both hands on three separate occasions before the defenceman could be ejected from the game.

Watson was given a game misconduct penalty—a penalty that carries an automatic $200 fine. The $200 fine is in addition to the $300.

Games Organizers Taking No Chances

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. (Reuter) — Though security measures at the British Commonwealth Games are coming in for heavy criticism.

The security operation is one of the biggest ever mounted in New Zealand and has come as a surprise to New Zealanders accustomed to a free and easy life.

Athletes and team officials say the security here is tighter than at any other international games, including the 1972 Munich Olympics.

Large numbers of men, most of them former policemen, soldiers and those on holiday such as schoolteachers, have been rigged out in khaki trousers and red berets, armed with walkie-talkie radios and posted around all the Games venues.

Entering any of the Games venues, especially the village, is impossible for anyone without the right pass and documents, all of which are carefully scrutinized.

Games organizers will not say directly why they have imposed such tough measures but hint that they are thinking a lot about radical groups who may want to disrupt the games to protest against sports teams visiting South Africa.

There are also memories of the massacre of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics by Arab terrorists.

Kingston Midgets Win In Tournament Opener

OSHAWA, Ont. (CP) — Ken Linseman went on to score a spree Monday night to give Kingston an 11-3 win over Newfoundland in the opening round tournament.

He had four goals and two assists for the winners, representing the Ontario Hockey Association. In the first division of the 12-team round-robin tournament.

Kingston, however, had to share first place with Calgary Rangers and Saskatoon Blazers who also won opening-round games. Saskatoon defeated Thunder Bay-Westfort Hurricanes 6-4, while Calgary downed the Vancouver North Shore Winter Club 6-5.

In Division II, Fredericton Red Wings topped the host club, Oshawa Parkway, 3-1, when Hull Kiwanis edged St. James, Man., Canadians 5-3, Verdun Lords of Quebec and East Hants Penguins of Nova Scotia open their schedule today.

The tournament for players 16 years and under, ends Saturday. The top two teams from each division will then meet in the final Sunday with the second-place teams meeting in the consolation final.

The winning team will receive a trip to the Soviet Union in March for a series of exhibition games.

In the Kingston-Newfoundland game, Rob Plumb and Mike Stevens each scored two goals for the winners. Kim Elliott, Mike Gilpin and Bob Mears added the others.

Brent Peterson scored three goals to lead Calgary, representing the Alberta Amateur Hockey Association. The Alberta club, which got single goals from Doug Robb, Russ Smith and Dale Yatkewchuk, led 3-0 after 16 minutes.

Randy Larsen, Neil Olefson, Ken Petlanduk, Gordy Plaser and Phillip Ashdon connected for Vancouver, members of the British Columbia Amateur Hockey Association.

Calgary had a 6-2 lead in the final period before B.C. rallied to the late stages.

Pete Allanby paced Fredericton with two goals and Allison Tufts added the other for the winners. Brian Hodges got the lone Oshawa goal.

Gordon Blacklock's two goals led Saskatoon to its win over Thunder Bay. The Blazers snapped a 2-2 first-period tie with two unanswered goals in the second.

Energy Parley Seems Sure To Cost You Buck or Two

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

OTTAWA — The dirty dozen less one, as at least some few would have our prime minister and 10 provincial premiers—those 11 men who get into your pockets so gorgeously—are at it again.

They got busy today on their conference on energy.

And as so often happens when this 11 get together, it is going to cost you a buck or so more to be a Canadian.

That is unless you live in Saskatchewan or Alberta.

Well, maybe this isn't definite yet, there still is a lot of talking to do.

But odds are that by the time you read Thursday's paper, when the conference will be finished, you will find that the cost of running the country—or keeping it healthy and prosperous if you will—has gone up.

As a citizen you will be paying more for your gasoline and fuel oil, that is again unless you live in Alberta or Saskatchewan, and probably even there.

Then there are two more ways in which you will be hit, either directly or indirectly, though most likely the latter.

The Maritime provinces are looking for cheaper gasoline and oil, and pretty well everyone agrees they should get it. This means subsidy.

Then Saskatchewan and Alberta, in a pay-off for concessions on price and revenue, are looking for lower freight rates. And again this means subsidy.

The question is whether the subsidies will mean extra taxation, and they may not.

The federal government, though it doesn't come right out and say so, is hoping to get enough windfall out of the increase in the wholesale cost of gasoline and oil into its pockets, particularly out of sales to the U.S., to cover most of the cost of them.

And it may succeed, though there is a lot of bargaining still to be done.

The Canadian individual may not then be hit with more tax.

But still he won't come up as anything but a loser. For he even now is paying more than necessary cost in reasonable profit for his gasoline and oil.

This, of course, is because of the Arabs, whose idea of a moon-shot is to send up fuel prices.

And he will be paying still more.

For with an eye on those Arab (and Venezuelan) prices, Alberta and Saskatchewan, the provinces in Canada who have this new gold, are looking for, preaching and insisting on be-

And though they will not get all they are looking for they certainly will get more than play money.

The one very bright spot is that we do have this oil (and natural gas) in Canada in good supply and that this will mean we can move ourselves into a fine competitive position with the rest of the world.

It can be taken from the conference already that Canadians will be able to buy their energy at less than the world price.

This will give our manufacturers, in fact the whole economy, a great big edge.

So though the individual citizen probably will come out of the meetings a loser, the nation itself should emerge with new muscle and optimism.

Courtroom Facilities Are Often Inadequate

TORONTO (CP) — In many areas of Ontario, courtroom facilities are inadequate to provide for the minimum needs of justice, the Ontario Law Reform Commission said Monday.

In a 456-page report, the five-man commission also recommended stalemate measures be taken against lawyers who delay the justice process.

But the commissioners used their toughest language for court facilities.

"Generally, we have found that there has been no significant improvement in court facilities since the 1964 assumption by the province of financial responsibility," the report said.

"In instances, court facilities continue to be indistinguishable to the casual observer from industrial plants or commercial establishments."

The report says a substantial improvement is required if justice is to be administered in clean, convenient and appropriate surroundings.

In dealing with the backlog of court cases, the commissioners said it should be a duty of a lawyer not only to be faithful to his clients but to uphold and improve the administration of justice.

"In extreme cases, the court should order an offending solicitor personally to pay the costs of the day to the opposing party when an unreasonable request for an adjournment is granted," the report said.

Lawyers should arrange their practice so that they don't have too many cases before the courts at one time "and if they fail in this regard it should be a matter for appropriate action by the law society."

The report also said that "where a motion is found to be totally devoid of legal merit and to have been brought solely for delay, or for some improper purpose," the court should require the responsible lawyer to pay the costs personally.

The commission also expressed concern over some of the civil actions taken to court by lawyers under the province's legal aid plan.

"Our impression . . . is that many civil actions are being launched prematurely and often unnecessarily, frivolous interlocutory proceedings are taken; provocative defence are put forward and usually withdrawn at trial; and in both civil and criminal proceedings appeals with little merit are taken to the Court of Appeal and to county judges."

OUT OUR WAY — by Neg Cochran

Sunday Shopping Religious Issue

TORONTO (CP) — The issue of whether restrictions on Sunday shopping should be legislated, an issue the Ontario government has been trying to keep on a secular basis, drew religious arguments at a public meeting Monday.

Roy Adams, a minister of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, told Justice Secretary George Kerr that any legislation would have to incorporate what he called a conscience law exempting Adventists, Jews or any other religion wishing to operate stores on Sunday or any other day.

He said that while the government has been saying that the issue is one of making Sunday a common day or rest and thereby establishing uniform store hours, "I believe back of this issue is the question of religion."

"We don't oppose the concept of a pause day; about 11,000 Adventists in Ontario every Saturday observe a pause," Mr. Adams said, adding that it would be "crass economic discrimination" for the province to impose Sunday closing.

Cheryl Roth, 19, said Sunday closing would bring "financial disaster" to her Jewish parents who close their shoe store at sundown Friday and reopen on Sunday.

Most of their customers are Jews, she said, and the bulk of their business is transacted in Sundays.

Responding to the religious arguments, Mr. Kerr said he wondered how a businessman could accommodate 19 or 15 different sects observing different holidays, and still run a business in a rational way.

Anesthetic in Oxygen Pipes Days After Mixup Found

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — Anesthetic was coming out of oxygen outlets 12 days after doctors reported they suspected crossed gas lines following the death of a patient, Sudbury General Hospital's chief anesthetist has testified.

Dr. Joseph Fyfe told an inquest Monday he was "floored" by the Sept. 19 discovery in four rooms of a new wing, including the one in which six-year-old Catherine Dominic died Sept. 7.

"I couldn't believe what I saw," Dr. Fyfe said in the first testimony in six days of hearings that an apparently malconnected section of the gas-supply system had been in use after the death of the girl. The inquest is also investigating 22 of the deaths.

Catherine was given anesthetic in the special procedures room for the setting of a broken arm. Evidence last week indicated she died almost immediately after the room's oxygen unit emitted nitrous oxide.

The special-procedures room was closed the same day, but a week later an administrative memo notified the staff that it was reopening. The day of reopening was not given in evidence.

Dr. Fyfe said he requested Sudbury Coroner Marcel Prevost to check the gas system and the gas machine used on the Dominic girl the day after she died. He did this as a "routine matute because an inquest was to be held."

Dr. Fyfe said he was advised that on Sept. 18, four days after the girl's notification, a patient in the room suddenly turned blue when given supposedly pure oxygen to speed his awakening from anesthesia, the same thing that happened to Miss Dominic.

When the oxygen mask was taken off the patient's face, he began to recover.

Dr. Fyfe said that on the next day he connected a face mask to the same oxygen outlet and tested the gas on himself. He became dizzy after about five breaths and another doctor told him he was turning blue. Tests the next day showed nitrous oxide present at oxygen outlets in four rooms.

Dr. Fyfe afforded the inquest a brief glimpse of a future direction of the inquiry when he told of speaking to a workman Sept. 20.

He testified the worker told him he had cut gas liners in part of the ceiling on the main floor, dropped lines down to an oxygen outlet and a nitrous oxide outlet and then reconnected the pipes.

He was steered off the subject by Crown Attorney John Tackach, who said the workman will be called later in the inquiry, which is expected to go on for about two weeks more.

REAL ESTATE:

A REALISTIC APPROACH

Ed. McKinney
A. E. McKinney
Realty Ltd.

During inflation (and we're in it), there's an excellent case for investing in housing. Most of a house is paid for with borrowed money. Someone else's fixed-dollar savings provides your mortgage money. Even though interest rates are up several notches from where they were, a house mortgage is the only way the average consumer can borrow long-term money.

This, then, is your big chance to turn inflation to your advantage. Your mortgage gives you full-price dollars to work with later. You then pay them back with cheaper dollars you will be earning for the next 20 or 30 years.

This isn't a cynical approach, it's realistic. In fact, it's one of the main reasons why many wealthy individuals continue to make big real estate investments. And you can do the same with a house that you own and need anyway.

His Favorite Subject

Retired Railroader Paints Indian Ways

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — Sixty years ago a boy named Josef Hawka watched a way of life disappear from the Canadian scene.

He saw the bleached buffalo bones carted off the western range.

He saw the proud Blackfoot Indian with his travois.

He saw the smoke from the teepee whirled away by the western wind.

Years later he sat with the Indians in their northern lodges smoking cigarettes in the cold winter night.

Still later, Joe Hawka, conductor for the Canadian Pacific Railway, chatted to Indian families as they clambered aboard his train.

Today, with those scenes still vivid in his mind, the retired railroader has launched another career—as an artist.

With no formal art training, he attacks both canvas and sandpaper with a vigor that belies his 69 years.

The results are both breathtaking and satisfying.

His forte is fine line drawing on sandpaper with pastel chalks.

His works are in homes across Canada and at least one has made it overseas to Europe.

Working out of his comfortable Peterborough home using a small room as a studio, he roams far afield looking for subjects and going through history books for photos.

Lily of the Mohawks, a near-saint to her people, adorns one wall, a horse thief is on another and in the vestibule a put-jawed brave with sad eyes watches a frontier close around him.

Not all his work concerns the past. American Indian is well represented by an elderly Haida grandmother knitting raw wool for a sweater.

Over the past 30 years, thousands of travellers met jovial Joe, the ever-helpful sleeping-car conductor who spent many years on the CPR transcontinental run. But considerably fewer know him today as Josef Draven Hawka, artist.

Mr. Hawka, with 170 pounds spread over a 5-foot-7 frame, steel-grey hair and closely-clipped moustache, looks more like a banker than an artist.

"Who wants to look like an artist, anyway?" he asks. "My life is not cluttered up with a lot of junk. I'm just a basic guy. All my life I've dealt with people and I love to be with them."

His right arm—his painting arm—is noticeably bowed, the aftermath of a rugby scrimmage 50 years ago. The bone was broken and did not set properly. That finished him with sports and the pain in the arm returned with age.

In his travels he sometimes points his car northward to where Indians still maintain close contact with the land.

His love for the Indian way of life can be tracked back to his boyhood in Taber, Alta.

As a boy he played in the buffalo wallows, and as an adventuresome young man he helped a trader push a scow along northern waterways.

In 1926 he went north with a crew drilling salt wells.

It was there, near Fort McMurray, that Joe Hawka was hit by an artistic spark that was not to flame for another 45 years.

He has always dabbled in painting, but confesses that it's only through pressure from his wife Margaret that he has really become serious in recent years.

His paintings are not meant to depict the Indian as a savage.

"An Indian to me is the greatest form of humanity," he said in an interview. "It's the Indian who made Canada."

Mr. Hawka sells his work privately from his home. He is firm about prices—no more bargain-basement deals or cut-rate specials.

Although reticent about divulging prices, he said none of the work in his house will be sold for less than $800.

"If people like art enough, they will pay for it.

"I've got art in my heart. But I'm not going to give it away any more."

Josef Hawka, a retired railroad conductor, sits in his Peterborough, Ont., studio with a painting of his favorite subject — the North American Indian. Although he has always dabbled in art, he started painting seriously a few years ago. (CP Photo)

Violin Was Once Handicap

REGINA (CP) — Ernest Kassian used to ride at the back of the bus with his violin case hidden under the seat so his friends wouldn't know he played the instrument.

"I lived a schizophrenic life," recalled the 27-year-old musician, now principal viola with the Regina Symphony. "While my friends were going to movies and football games, I was going to music lessons but pretended to be going somewhere else."

Mr. Kassian lived in a rough neighborhood where aspiring concert violinists were likely to be labelled something less than masculine. So he kept his musical interests a secret.

"I was greatly embarrassed when a teacher would announce to the class that he had seen me play on television or in concert."

The embarrassment was gone when Mr. Kassian headlined a recent concert with a 45-minute solo, his most conspicuous performance since joining the symphony four years ago.

Helicopter Hunters War Over Huge Deer Herds

AUCKLAND (CP) — The Royal New Zealand Air Force has been called into action to control a venison war.

Lured by a great bonanza in soaring prices for venison, rival helicopter operators working among the great deer herds in the remote farmland of the extreme southwest of New Zealand have reached a state of open conflict.

Sabotage of helicopters, brazen and illegal poaching of deer and shots fired at machines have spurred the government into action. Until a suitable civilian helicopter is available to police the situation, Iroquois helicopters of the air force have been pressed into service.

Scene of the war is the vast Fiordland National Park, wild, almost trackless, and virtually uninhabited. It covers some three million acres, running inland from the west coast of the South Island to the mountain and forest country where the fiords cut miles inland from the ocean.

Great herds of deer roam through the forests of this area. For years the increase in deer population was a matter of concern, since the animals caused serious forest damage and threatened erosion of the steep mountainsides.

Professional shooters were employed by the government to keep the deer under control. But because of the extreme isolation of the area, the great majority of carcasses were left where they fell—getting the venison to markets would have been an impossible task.

The coming of helicopters changed the situation. In addition, the price of venison rose steeply. A modest export market to Europe, especially in West Germany, has grown into a lucrative export trade worth some $6 million a year.

Professional hunters working on the ground have been using helicopters to lift their kill. In other cases, crack shots operate from the helicopters themselves, herding the deer and picking off large numbers of terrified beasts.

Some of these operations have been perfectly legal over tracts of country where hunting is allowed—although there have been protests from abroad at the wholesale slaughter of deer.

But the situation in Fiordland National Park is different. While the park board wishes to prevent depredations of deer in the forest, it is also concerned to preserve the picnic and tranquillity of the area.

Accordingly it let sole rights to one helicopter company in return for an annual large sum. The other helicopter operators have not been prepared to accept what is monopolistic.

The licensed company is understood to be taking some 100,000 deer a year from the park, with a fleet of 12 helicopters. Other operators are acknowledged to have been poaching in the park on a large scale.

Something like 50 helicopters are operating in this and adjacent areas. Resentments and animosities have led to an upsurge in incidents. Infuriated ground shooters, watching helicopters poaching in their areas, have on occasion taken pot shots at machines—so far without fatal consequences.

One of the hangars of the licensed company mysteriously caught fire a few months ago. An attempt on another hangar failed, but in November a further attempt resulted in serious fire damage to two helicopters.

An independent operator found someone had put sand into his fuel tank and only just managed to land his machine safely.

Government efforts to police that vast area have been conducted under difficulties. The helicopters have been more manoeuvrable than the pursuing aircraft. A civilian aviation inspector recently described how in a fixed-wing aircraft he pursued a helicopter for an hour as it ducked around hills, trees and river beds. Much of the flying was below 300 feet and the chase was hazardous.

Even when brought into court, operators have got only a small fine which hardly affects the profits from their operations.

Some idea of the profitability of the operations is given by a statement by one group of helicopter companies which announced that it had offered the Fiordland National Park Board a fee of $1 million a year for rights to shoot deer in the park, but had been turned down.

Alarmed at the growth of violence in the venison "war," the minister of civil aviation, Dr. A. M. Finlay, has authorized the use of air force helicopters to keep the peace until civil control arrangements can be made.

Meanwhile, deer farmers are building up herds in captivity to supply the venison demand abroad under more controlled conditions. Many countries demand a veterinary certificate of inspection of deer before slaughter—which obviously is not possible with deer killed in the wild. The North American market normally required such certificates.

To cater for this requirement, the government a few years ago authorized deer farming under strictly controlled conditions—such as the erection of fences around deer farming areas and requirements for health control.

YOU TO TOMORROW

There is only today between you and tomorrow

Which is why Canada Pension Plan benefits will be increased today and will be kept in line with the cost increases of tomorrow

What this means to you as a beneficiary

From January 1st 1974, Canada Pension Plan benefit payments will be adjusted to reach . . . then maintain a level in line with the actual cost of living.

If you are receiving monthly benefits that began during the period 1967 to 1973, your benefits have been recalculated so that the amount you receive in 1974 is related to the actual increase in the cost of living over the years your benefits have been paid. When you receive your January 1974 benefit cheque you will see that it has been increased. The increase in your payment will vary from 5% to 20% and will depend on the year in which your benefit first became payable.

In future years, if living costs continue to rise, you can expect further increases in your benefits based on current cost of living data.

What this means to you as a contributor

As a contributor to the Canada Pension Plan, you are building a basic and portable retirement plan for the future and at the same time providing current protection for yourself and your dependents against the possibility of severe disability or early death. .

In order to protect the value of your eventual benefits, the Canadian Parliament has passed legislation which ensures that the contributions you make today will give benefits that maintain the purchasing power of today's wages twenty, thirty or even fifty years from now . . . when you need it!

To achieve this, the Government plans to have the earnings ceiling — the maximum amount on which contributions are paid and on which benefits are calculated — increased each year so that it will reach, and then keep even with the average earnings of Canadian industrial workers. This ceiling will be raised from $5,600.00 in 1973, to $8,600.00 in 1974 and $7,400.00 in 1975.

This new earnings ceiling means that the year's basic exemption — the initial amount on which your contributions are not payable — is changed from $600.00 in 1973 to $700.00 for 1974.

These changes also mean that the maximum employee-contributions will increase from $90.00 a year in 1973 to $100.20 in 1974. Your contribution is matched by your employer. In the case of self-employed persons, the maximum annual contribution is increased to $212.40 for 1974 as against $180.00 last year. For earnings of less than $5,700.00, there will be no increase in contributions.

The change in the earnings ceiling means that the maximum retirement pension will rise from $90.71 for pensions effective in December 1972 to $134.97 for those whose pensions will begin in December 1975. As the maximum earnings levels for the years after 1975 continue to rise, so will the maximum retirement pensions in those years. There will also be increases in the maximum values each year for disability and survivors' benefits.

Thousands of Low-pay Workers Short-changed by Employers

OTTAWA (CP) — Louise Trottier, 58, works part-time for a chain of corner stores that for 10 years, she says, has paid her less than the Quebec minimum wage.

She is one of thousands of low-paid workers apparently short-changed millions of dollars each year by employers who fail to comply with provincial and federal laws.

Some observers, especially in the labor movement, say the cases that come to light are only a small part of the actual total.

Like Mrs. Trottier, many workers say they are reluctant to register complaints.

Trottier is not her real name. She fears she would lose her job if her employer knew of her complaints.

She works about 30 hours a week and her earnings were at first only a supplement to her husband's income. But three years ago her husband, also 58, lost half his salary when the small company he works for got into financial trouble.

Mr. Trottier, too proud to go on unemployment insurance and unable to find other work, struggles to help him. His wife's small weekly earnings then began to take on greater significance.

The total amount of illegally-withheld pay collected later by provincial and federal governments is unknown. A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press indicates that some provinces lack precise figures or decline to make them public.

In Ontario, the province with the largest population, 3.5 million—about $2.4 million was reported collected for 36,-269 workers. Even the relatively high Ontario minimum of $2 an hour, set Jan. 1, would pay a 40-hour-week employee only $4,160 a year, well below the poverty level, one union leader said.

Federal: In the fiscal year 1972-73, inspectors identified 268,205 in underpayments in 867 workplaces. After investigating 1,700 employers under federal legislation, officials first examine complaints from employees, then, "if matters permit," turn to routine investigation of minimum wage.

In the first nine months of 1973, $27,416 in underpayments were recovered. The federal minimum is $1.80 an hour; to increase to $2.20 in April, when an estimated 19,-300 workers will benefit.

British Columbia: Government statistics do not break down minimum-wage underpayments but some employers have been asked to make refunds.

The minimum went up to $2.25 from $1 Dec. 3 and is due to rise to $2.50 next June.

Norma B.C. labor spokesmen said a few employers have been taking advantage of legal loopholes.

Manitoba and Saskatchewan: These provinces report few violations of minimum-wage laws and officials say most cases that do arise are accidental.

Saskatchewan has the highest minimum on the Prairies with an increase to $2 from $1.75 in December. Manitoba's wage is $1.90, set Oct. 1.

Alberta: Underpayments collected by the government in the first 11 months of 1973 totalled $86,242, with $72,450 arising from underpaid overtime.

Ontario: The $2.4 million collected for the first 11 months of 1973 includes overtime, vacation and termination pay and other wages owing as well as minimum-pay shortfalls.

In 1972 the total collected was $2,139,000 on behalf of 34,-471 employees working for 16,717 employers.

The $2 minimum, up from $1.85 Jan. 1, does not apply to the fishing and farming industries and to taxi-drivers. Continuous workers have a minimum of $2.25.

Quebec: A labor department spokesman said there were 1,139 complaints from employees in 1973.

The minimum wage is $1.85, up from $1.70 Nov. 1.

Atlantic Provinces: In New Brunswick, where the minimum rose to $1.75 from $1.50 Jan. 1, more than $13,000 was collected for workers by November.

Nova Scotia enforced payments totalling $59,698 in 1972 when 1,182 complaints were filed. Three companies were prosecuted in the courts. The province's minimum is $1.65.

Prince Edward Island, which adopted a level of $1.65 Jan. 1, collected $7,882 in underpayments for employees in 1972.

In the same year Newfoundland took action against 97 employers and recovered more than $50,000 for employees. On Jan. 1 the minimum rose to $1.80 from $1.40.

No Economic Growth Likely in '74 - - Kierans

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada likely will not experience any real economic growth this year, former Liberal cabinet minister Eric Kierans said in a television interview Monday.

He said there will not be any real growth in Japan, Europe or Britain this year and no more than one-per-cent real growth in the United States.

"So how can we have five-to six-per-cent growth? It's just not possible. I think we're going to be flat this year."

Mr. Kierans, now an economics teacher at McGill University in Montreal, said Finance Minister John Turner is basing some of his growth projections on a 21-to 22-per-cent increase in capital expenditures. He said the figure likely will be 12 to 14 per cent this year.

Mr. Kierans resigned as communications minister three years ago.

Copying Machines Defeat Publisher

EDMONTON (CP) — Institute of Applied Arts Ltd., a 44-year-old Edmonton publishing house, died, the victim of the overzealous use of copying machines.

The company, dependent on the publication of copyrighted education material—largely in paperback form—books, found its sales dwindling as teachers often bought only one copy and duplicated the rest.

"That was definitely one of the reasons we had to go out of business," former manager Gay Bond said.

Applied Arts was started in 1929 by W. C. Richards, a biology teacher for more than 40 years who had a problem for the company in that it completed the preparation of workbooks and complementary reading.

The Saskatchewan-based Western Producer, owned by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, has bought the copyrights on such books as Eye Opener Bob and Hooker's Bi plus 1 I Know, I Was There, which tells the story of the Social Credit government in Alberta.

New Service

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian air regulators have initialled an agreement with the Netherlands granting CP Air certain economic benefits in exchange for broader landing rights to KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, O. G. Skinner, deputy transport minister, said Monday.

Mr. Skinner confirmed reports that KLM has obtained landing rights in Toronto in addition to existing rights to Montreal. But, he said he could not give details as the agreement must still be ratified by cabinet.

Pulling Lashes Nervous Reaction

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a terrible problem which I cannot break. I pluck my eyelashes.

I am embarrassed to show my eyes. I don't enjoy doing it any more and when they start to grow out I get excited. But I just pull them out again.

People have asked me why I do this. I don't have any reason. Is my habit dangerous? Is it normal? I don't have any left.—M.W.

Pulling out your own eyelashes is not "normal," of course, but it is a habit that a certain number of people have. The one answer we have to the cause is that it is a nervous reaction of anxious individuals who have some sort of emotional problem.

You are lucky that your lashes have been regrowing. Sometimes they don't. And in the best of circumstances they grow slowly.

The most immediate risk of pulling out eyelashes is infection in the lash follicles — an infection around the eyes is especially to be avoided. A secondary worry is that the eye lashes are there for a purpose, to protect the eyes. Why defeat that protection? Finally, repeated plucking may eliminate new growth, at which point you are stuck with that lashless look.

To stop the habit, try to analyze the nervous pressures that exist when you do it. You, your parents or your doctor should try to find a way to that. If it is a boredom—keep busy. If it is a school or family situation, go at the problem head on and find the solution. Because, obviously, pulling out your eyelashes is no solution to whatever the underlying tension may be.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: We've been married 25 years and my husband has always taken two or three highballs before dinner. The last five years or so he has been drinking his whisky on the rocks. Never more than three drinks, but each drink a double shot.

He always prided himself on being able to hold his liquor, and this has been true until recently. The last six months or so after the first drink his speech begins to slur, he can hardly walk straight, and by the time he has had his third drink he becomes almost incoherent, very belligerent and absolutely abominable.

If I tell him to stop drinking or that he's drunk, he says he's not drinking any more than usual, and this is true. Does something happen to a man as he gets older that he can't hold his liquor as well as when he was younger? He is 60.—Y.H.

Yes, people can lose their tolerance for alcohol.

There may be brain damage, or he may just have lost the will to fight off the effects of the liquor, but either way he just can't tolerate the same amount any longer.

Six shots before dinner for 25 years is a tremendous amount of alcohol. In view of what it's happening to him, I would say that he had reached (and passed) the point at which he ought to quit entirely.

However, I have never had any success in persuading such people until they have damaged themselves to the point at which they no longer could contend that they aren't alcoholics.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: When a woman is approaching menopause, could her periods be different than they normally were? Mine remain regular but I have had two that dragged out for two weeks. The first was heavy, the other wasn't. I am 47.—Mrs. R.H.

All sorts of irregularities are not only possible but common as menopause approaches—missed periods, alternatively light and heavy ones, and so on.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am in my 13th week of pregnancy and experienced two problems. I am taking a vitamin pill daily containing one milligram of folic acid. My doctor said this was to nourish the growing placenta. I have read recently that it prevents miscarriage. What is the purpose of folic acid?

Also, can smoking approximately one pack of cigarettes a day be harmful to the fetus?—R. H.

Folic acid is one of the B-vitamins, necessary in the production of blood. It is not a specific for preventing miscarriage, but deficiency if a pregnant woman is lacking sufficient folic acid, giving her a supplement of it is going to have that effect.

By having you take it, your doctor isn't hinting that you may be in danger of a miscarriage he just wants you properly nourished.

The amounts required in pregnancy is substantially larger than the minimum an adult can get along on otherwise—the recommended daily amounts is 4 mg. for an adult, but during pregnancy, and you are getting it, with a moderate added margin of safety. So I think you probably are worrying over nothing.

Smoking! In general it has been noted that women who smoke have smaller babies.

Heroin Addiction Expected Among Montreal's French

MONTREAL (CP) — The director of a Montreal drug treatment centre believes the city may be on the verge of experiencing a major heroin addiction trend.

Raymond Cohen, director of Alternatives, said in an interview many French-speaking youths are using amphetamines and are likely to graduate to heroin.

He said heroin has replaced speed as the major hard-drug problem among English-speaking drug users and "it is reasonable to expect French-speaking kids to travel the same route."

Mr. Cohen's view partly contradicts the observations of the Le Dain commission on the non-medical use of drugs which said "the number of people using speed (amphetamines) appears to have stabilized and possibly even declined."

Mr. Cohen said the commission's conclusion, presented in December, "is probably valid nationally, but Montreal is a special case."

He said 96 per cent of the French-speaking drug users who come to Alternatives are using amphetamines.

Speed use among English-speaking young people reached its peak about 1967, he said, but the French-speaking group started using speed much later.

"In drug use, as in drug treatment, Canada has always been a few years behind the U.S. and French-speaking Canadians always a few steps behind their English-speaking counterparts," Mr. Cohen said.

The transition from amphetamines to heroin is logical for psychological rather than physical reasons, he said. "Once the addict cannot last long without doing permanent damage to himself and, because amphetamines are taken intravenously, he has overcome the fear of giving himself a needle.

"After about one year, the speed user has one of three choices. He can stop, which is unlikely; he can continue and risk killing himself or having a complete breakdown; finally, he can switch to another drug. That's usually the choice and heroin is the drug they switch to."

Because so many addicts are young, Mr. Cohen said the Alternatives staff are less keen than the Le Dain commission on the use of methadone as a solution to heroin addiction.

Methadone, a synthetic opiate, is highly addictive but its effects last longer than heroin and it does not produce the same type of euphoria. The lasting effect of methadone eliminates an addict's need to resort to crime to support an expensive heroin habit.

The staff at Alternatives believes that people need not be addicted to anything and says its behavioral, drug-free program has been more than 75 per cent successful.

"Drug addiction is a learned behavior and we believe people can unlearn it," said Gloria Steinberg, an Alternatives' therapist. "Drug use is only a symptom of a deeper underlying problem."

All addicts have certain common traits, she said.

"All of them feel inadequate, inferior and insecure. They do not have a high opinion of themselves."

The key to Alternatives' treatment is the "contingency contract"—a written agreement between clients and the staff setting out rewards for not using drugs and punishments for not living up to the contract.

The contract explicitly states the behavior the client wants to change, Mrs. Steinberg said. One individual, for instance, could say: "I want to stop using drugs; I want to stop abusing my wife and stop being late for work."

As he achieves these goals he receives certain predetermined rewards. If he fails, he suffers a predetermined consequence.

The program begins with a two-week screening to determine whether the client seriously intends to follow treatment.

Then he is required to spend 10 days in an Alternatives building to receive physical withdrawal from drugs and begin the behavior-changing process.

During this period he has no contact with anyone except Alternatives' staff members and volunteer workers.

The client then returns to his normal environment but his activities and personal contacts are closely monitored by the Alternatives staff.

As an individual learns to control himself, staff supervision of his activities and movements decreases.

The staff of Alternatives, which started in March, 1970, believes problems leading to drug addiction involve more than the individual.

The program often includes separate contracts with the parents of a client to ensure that their behavior towards the client conforms to the treatment.

Mrs. Steinberg said that because addiction often is a response to family problems, confining an addict, as the Le Dain report suggested, does little good.

"You can't deal with an addict in isolation. The problem developed in an environment and it is there that it must be treated."

Not all addicts are young, Mrs. Steinberg said. Many depressed housewives and harassed businessmen resort to barbiturates or other drugs in times of stress.

Alternatives, which has a permanent staff of seven, is financed by a $54,000 grant from the federal health department.

Once-scorned Bluefin Now Commercial Prize

HALIFAX (CP) — In the water, the bluefin tuna is a prized catch but on a dinner plate Canadians regard him as fit mainly for dogs.

They prefer to eat bonito, albacore and other tasty, white-fleshed cousins of the bluefin, whose flesh is dark, oily and strong-tasting. Until recently most bluefin landed off Canada have been left to rot or sold dirt-cheap as pet food.

In Japan, however, bluefin tuna is a delicacy. They call it "magru" and eat it raw in small slices.

Now a combination of rising living standards in Japan and diminishing tuna supplies from their traditional sources has made the bluefin as desirable to Canadian commercial fishermen as he has always been to sportsmen.

Two years ago, the most a fisherman could get for bluefin was four or five cents a pound. This season it went to 45 cents, a good return for a fish which averages 450 to 500 pounds and sometimes exceeds 1,000. By the time it reaches Japan the price is about $2.50 a pound.

At least three Nova Scotia entrepreneurs have begun exporting bluefins to Japan. The largest operation is run by S. J. Eitman of Glen Margaret.

Almost all the tuna exported from Nova Scotia are caught in St. Margaret's Bay, south of Halifax, where a sports fishery has never been established because the fish, for some reason, are unwilling to take a hook there.

The Japanese insist that their tuna must be absolutely fresh and that it arrive at the Tokyo fish market in one piece. This has made shipping a complex process.

The tuna are deep-frozen to 32 degrees below zero and rushed in bonded refrigerator containers to Boston for direct flights to Japan. They can be on Japanese dinner tables 36 hours after being caught.

The season is short. The Japanese place a premium on high fat content and good fat tuna are in Canadian waters only in July and August.

Mr. Eitman predicted a growing demand for tuna exports but there have been problems. Tuna were scarce last year and he lays at least part of the blame on the Japanese themselves.

"They had a number of longliners off Nova Scotia and took an unconscionable number of fish last summer," he said. "One ship carried close to 900 tuna. In that one boat they carried more tuna than was caught in all the Maritime provinces."

Fishing was better off Prince Edward Island, where sports fishermen hauled in several world record catches last season. But he professes anxious to encourage sport fishing has banned commercial operations in its waters.

However, Mr. Eitman said, "one run into the extraordinary golden horns a so-called sportsman operates a fleet of 60 Cape Island boats and puts in skilled fishermen with sports caps on their heads to boat the fish."

Air Canada Spanked

OTTAWA (CP) — Air Canada's licence for operating advanced booking charter (ABC) flights has been suspended for 15 days at a time when no flights were planned by the publicly-owned airline.

The licence suspension by the Canadian transport commission dates from last Friday.

A transport commission spokesman said Monday the suspension for charter rule violations last summer was made in this way because the commission feels the "sins of the carrier should not be visited on the public."

Air Canada is not resuming ABC flights until March or April, he said.

The commission took a similar approach in suspending CP Air's licence under the old affinity charter rules for one week in November, 1972. No flights were scheduled by CP Air at the time.

The Air Canada licence suspension was for failing to provide proper passenger lists for three return flights leaving Toronto last month for Rome and Vienna.

The commission said Air Canada transported people whose names did not appear on the advance lists.

Bishop Buried

TORONTO (C:) — Rt. Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, 65, who became the first executive officer of the worldwide Anglican communion, was buried in New York City Monday following his death last Friday in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

The Lambeth Conference of Bishops created the post of executive officer in 1969 to act as a central office for the international and inter-racial family of Anglicans. At that time, the communion numbered about 40 million. Now there are more than 55 million Anglicans in the world.

In 1964, Bishop Bayne, a bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, was succeeded as the executive officer by Most Rev. R. S. Dean of the Anglican Church of Canada, who served until 1966. The present executive officer is Rt. Rev John W. A. Howe, who has the title of secretary-general of the Anglican consultative council.

Vote Ordered

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — The Ontario Labor Relations Board (OLRB) ruled Monday that employees at Hiram Walker and Sons Ltd. here will vote to determine whether they want to sever ties with Local 61, Distillery Workers Union.

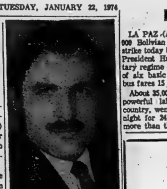
Richard Tighe, Local 61 president, said Monday he hopes the vote will be taken within a week.



Income Good

HAMILTON (CP) — The trial of James Reynolds, a former professional football player charged with keeping a bawdy house and living off the avails of prostitution, was told Monday a raid on a downtown massage parlor showed income there ranged to $350 a day.

Police Sgt. Douglas Larson testified that account books, as well as girlie magazines and a best-selling book on prostitution, were seized on the premises. One account book showed daily income of about $330 and the other $365.

Reynolds, 33, former player with Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Eastern Football Conference, was arrested last October. Four women working in the parlor have been fined $100 for being inmates of a bawdy house.

The trial continues.

JAMES LAXER

Says Reserves Not Developed

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — James Laxer, spokesman for the Ontario Waffle Movement, said Monday that the energy problem is not a result of shortages of supply but has evolved because corporations have hindered the development of known reserves in North America.

He told a forum here that Canada must pursue public ownership of all resource industries. He said failure to support nationalization is tantamount to "throwing away the future of Canada for the next 30 years."

Mr. Laxer said reserve statistics show there is enough oil for the next 30 years and enough natural gas for at least another 25 years

WELLINGTON (AP) — The New Zealand government today ordered the closure of gasoline stations from noon Saturday to 7 a.m. Monday and strict enforcement of a 50-mile-an-hour speed limit

Acquitted

TORONTO (CP) — Constable David Travers, 22, was acquitted Monday of an assault charge arising out of an incident last year during a strike at Artistic Woodwork Co. Ltd.

Food Prices Doubled

LA PAZ (AP) — Nearly 50,000 Bolivian workers were on strike today to protest action by President Hugo Banzer's military regime doubling the prices of six basic foods and raising bus fares 15 per cent.

About 35,000 miners, the most powerful labor group in the country, went on strike at midnight for 24 hours, demanding more than the $20-a-month pay increase the government ordered to offset the increases. Julie Says Dad Innocent

NEW YORK (AP) — Julie Nixon Eisenhower says her father should resign as president "if he is involved in Watergate and has been lying to the American people." But she says "he hasn't done anything wrong."

Mrs. Eisenhower made the comments in an interview published in the February issue of McCall's magazine.

The article also quotes her husband, David Eisenhower, as saying that Julie's current spate of public appearances, interviews and other activities in defence of her father has led to occasional strains in their marriage.

Seven Found Dead, Fear 8 More Buried by Terrace Avalanche

TERRACE, B.C. (CP) — Seven bodies have been recovered from an avalanche that destroyed a service station, cafe and small trailer park 28 miles west of this northwest British Columbia community.

A search for additional bodies believed buried under the flattened buildings was halted early today until avalanche experts could assess the danger posed to rescue workers by an overhanging ledge of snow.

One survivor also was found by RCMP and more than 100 volunteers probing through the wet, packed snow with the aid of floodlights and two dogs trained in avalanche work.

As many as 15 persons are feared to have been buried when tons of snow ripped down the 5,366-foot mountain at 10 a.m. PST (1 p.m. EST) Tuesday. The slide was 400 feet long, 100 feet wide and up to 30 feet deep.

An avalanche authority at the scene warned that about two-thirds of the slide was still to come.

Volkmar Werner Zobel, 30, of Prince Rupert, a mail truck driver, was hysterical when dug out of the snow where he had been entombed for more than five hours.

He was still screaming when put aboard a helicopter to be flown to Terrace, where he was in serious condition suffering from extreme exposure.

Confirmed dead Tuesday, their bodies recovered, were:

Allan MacDonald, 20, of Terrace, a highways department grader operator; Steve Minenko, about 40, a heavy equipment operator employed by the service station; Donald Lagimodiere, 32, of Prince Rupert, B.C., reported to have been on a business trip; and Theodord Gerald Armstrong, 27, of Terrace, a private grader operator.

Mr. Zobel and the body of another man were located near where gasoline pumps had been.

Charlie Daumont of Terrace, operator of the service station and cafe, and his daughter, Debbie, 19, were also known to have been in the buildings when the slide struck.

RCMP said occupants of the mobile homes could bring the number of victims to 15.

There were at least seven snow slides in the area Tuesday, triggered by an 80-inch snowfall in the last 12 days followed by heavy rain. It was raining lightly early today.

Police said rescue work was tedious slow because the area had to be first probed by hand to make sure it was free of bodies. Then the snow was removed. The operation could take several days, police said.

Shortly before the avalanche, Mr. Daumont had telephoned Terrace to say he hoped to return there later if the road was cleared of snow.

RCMP said Mr. Zobel had stopped at the cafe until the highway to the west, blocked by other slides, was cleared.

Mr. Zobel was replacing a driver who died when his mail truck left the highway and plunged into the nearby Skeena River.

Wells to Enter Negotiations In Three School Districts

TORONTO (CP) Education Minister Thomas Wells said Tuesday he will participate in teacher-school board contract disputes in three areas of the province.

Mr. Wells said in an interview he will enter negotiations "in the next few days" involving separate schools in Wellington County, Sudbury and Carleton.

Both the education minister and Geoffrey Wilkinson, president of the Ontario Teachers Federation, said they hope disputes in nine areas involving 5,-000 teachers will be settled by the end of the month when mass resignations are scheduled to go into effect.

If a settlement is not reached by then, Mr. Wells could ask Premier William Davis to recall the legislature and reintroduce Bill 274, which would block the resignations.

The bill, first introduced last month, was withdrawn after a compromise was reached between the teachers and the government to permit negotiations until the end of the month. Mass resignations were originally scheduled for Dec. 21, 1973.

Mr. Wells met behind closed doors Tuesday with leaders of the Ontario Teachers Federation and the Ontario School Trustees' Council to discuss Bill 275, which would outlaw teacher strikes and mass resignations and impose compulsory arbitration in contract disputes.

Thorson Given Right to Fight Languages Bill

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada has allowed a challenge to continue against the Official Languages Act by making a precedent-setting ruling that a taxpayer can challenge in the courts the constitutional validity of federal law.

The ruling leaves it up to the discretion of the court whether it hears such a class action by an individual.

In making the ruling, the court, in a judgment written by the new chief justice, Bora Laskin, allowed an 85-year-old retired judge to continue his four-year-old lone fight to outlaw the Official Languages Act.

In a 4-to-3 decision, the court overturned the decisions of two Ontario lower courts and said that the judge, Joseph Thorson, may proceed with his case in Ontario Supreme Court to have the act declared ultra vires of Parliament.

Mr. Thorson is former president of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Israeli Troops Start Withdrawal

From AP-REUTER

Israel began vacating the Egyptian side of the Suez canal today in the first move toward disengagement of forces, sources in Tel Aviv and Cairo said.

Military sources in Tel Aviv said Israeli troops were starting to roll their tanks back across the canal and digging up 750-800 explosive mines and communications lines from the sands of occupied Egypt.

The desert road from Cairo to Suez was opened to the Egyptians for the first time since Israeli forces occupied almost 1,-000 square miles west of the canal during the October war.

The sources said Arab ambulance drivers were to take about 300 wounded Egyptian troops from the encircled city of Suez.

Moves were also under way to return the bodies of as many as 335 Israeli soldiers killed in the fighting and to allow Israeli parties to search Egyptian-held areas for more bodies, Israeli officers said.

The Israeli sources said Israel's phased evacuation of the west bank is timed to be completed by Feb. 12.

They said the evacuated territory would be handed over to United Nations units in two more stages and Egyptian troops could move in at the earliest six hours after that.

The second stage, which would last until Feb. 3, would see Israel evacuating the region south of Fayid and handing over the airfield to the United Nations.

The final stage would be completed with the last Israeli soldier crossing the canal Feb. 12, the sources said.

Oil to Bring Equality

Confederation Faces Surgery

OTTAWA — Major surgery is to be performed on confederation, though at this stage only diagnosis is likely.

As the dirty dozen less one, as at least a few cynics class our prime minister and ten provincial premiers—those men who dig so gorgeously into your pockets, met here yesterday in the first day of their energy conference this was the prime impression that had to be taken.

As far as you and I are concerned let it be said right away that obviously it is going to cost us a bigger buck to be a Canadian.

For Full Details Of Yesterday's Session Of The Energy Conference See Page 11

There wasn't a government spokesman who denied that the price of gasoline and fuel oil would be going up, or that even tried to contest that they should.

Then with much talk of subsidies for eastern fuel prices and for freight rates from the west there also is a possibility of some tax increases.

But this is the short term an effect on you and I, Joe Citizen. And with it there is the reassurance that at least we should be paying less for our gasoline and oil than the rest of the world. Also that increased taxes may be avoided through windfall profits from export sales and a federal take out of higher prices at home.

But on the long-term it was also obvious that the union of provinces and the federal government which makes up Canada is heading for a new era.

The goal which was developed at the first day of the conference was equality of opportunity in the standards of living across the country.

This is not a new goal, of course. It has been heard since confederation itself.

But largely until now in terms of big service rather than action.

The fact that Alberta, and particularly Saskatchewan, now have oil, the golden fluid of the world today, is apparently enough to give the push that has been needed to bring the ideal of equality into some shape of practicality.

For there was no denial by anyone, even the federal government, that the provinces own natural resources within their boundaries.

And while bargaining for a good return for themselves on their oil, a depleting resource, Alberta and Saskatchewan were bargaining just as hard for a truly uniform nation, with equal opportunity in every corner.

And they will win their argument, at least to a substantial degree, for the other provinces need their oil and have to listen—and this particularly applies to Ontario, the province of prosperity, which would sink in depression without it.

As of now one can't say what the final developments may take. The real gut discussion at the conference is expected to be that no detailed decisions are expected.

It is a diagnostic process and the most optimistic expectations are that there may be some broad agreement reached on broad principles, such as that there should be a uniform price for energy across the country.

But still, almost certainly the process will lead to support of the old confederation which has seen very much "have" and very much "have not" areas across the country.

Already there are those economists and politicians who are classing this as the most important conference since the confederation meetings themselves.

And it would be no surprise if eventually history agrees with them.

Western Premiers Balk at Decision

OTTAWA (CP) — All four Western premiers balked today at giving quick approval to a complex new oil policy proposed by the federal government, and were warned by Prime Minister Trudeau that solutions must be found in a few hours, not in a few weeks.

Premiers Dave Barrett of British Columbia, Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan and Ed Schreyer of Manitoba told the opening of the second day of the national energy conference that up to a month will be needed to assess the policy outlined Tuesday.

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta had expressed this view Tuesday night and reiterated his stand today.

Mr. Trudeau disagreed with the Western premiers.

"I don't think we're going to have a free week. We can't leave this room without some proposal. We have a few hours."

The prime minister said short-term pricing solutions must be reached to deal with current energy problems.

The conference agreed to discuss pricing later in the day and moved on to the discussion of alternate forms of energy.

A Kingston man, Richard Dixon, 21, was yesterday fined $250 and had his driver's licence suspended for nine months after he was convicted in provincial court here of driving with more than 80 milligrams of alcohol in his blood.

Dixon was arrested by police Nov. 16 after the car he was driving went out of control and rolled along the median on Highway 401, near the CNR overpass.

Court was told yesterday that Dixon was driving at a high rate of speed along the highway around 8:45 p.m. when he lost control of his car, flipped over onto the median and rolled for 330 feet before the car came to rest.

Damage arising from the accident was estimated at $5,000. Crown Attorney Glenn Deline told the court:

"The Ontario Provincial Police officer, who investigated the accident, said that he detected an odor of alcohol on Dixon's breath when he talked to him at the accident scene and had asked Dixon to take a breathalyzer test.

At the station, Dixon had a breathalyzer reading of 150 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood. The criminal code calls for a conviction against drivers with a reading greater than 80 milligrams.

In passing sentence, Judge J.L. Clendenning said that he was taking Dixon's extensive record of driving convictions into consideration. The record included convictions for dangerous driving, driving while impaired and driving while disqualified.

BEATTIE,

Prince Edward Planner:

A Plan Is Only a Piece of Paper Without Support of Community

PICTON — Advisor to the Prince Edward planning board, Hlaraddin Ahmed, yesterday told Picton Rotarians that plans on paper are worthless unless accepted by the community.

Mr. Ahmed briefly discussed Prince Edward's draft official plan presented to the public last November and referred to certain planning problems in the county.

He described planning as a field that is always involved with the future and said the planning board has attempted to map out a broad, comprehensive plan.

Studies to reveal development conditions and trends show that Prince Edward is a rural region with unique characteristics of environment. Tourists are attracted to this area where the economy is based on agriculture and recreation.

Mr. Ahmed noted that agriculture, as a- developent base for jobs and income in Prince Edward, is dropping in some aspects and rising in others.

Farm income has increased but there are fewer farms today and fewer persons employed on them.

Recreation in Prince Edward has "great potential," but its present organization is not sufficiently developed to provide jobs and adequate income.

The county government has decided to-stop industry to offset the shortcomings of other economic bases.

Mr. Ahmed said that the county's population is now approximately 21,000 and under present trends it has a projected growth of 10,000 persons in the next 13 years.

These new residents, and the necessary services for them, must be located in the county.

Mr. Ahmed told Rotarians that there are 500 miles of shoreline, a prime recreational resource, in the county for multiple uses.

The farmer owns- waterfront land can sell, however, to an individual who wants to build a house on the waterfront.

It-is speculated that should this be permitted indefinitely all future generations would be prohibited from access to the waterfront.

The planner also expressed concern for subdivision developments in rural areas and said that 2,000 acres of prime agriculture land here has been lost by this type of project in the past. Some of the property ties vacant.

In southwestern Ontario 50 percent of the best farm land has "gone under concrete," he reported.

The Prince Edward County plan urges residential development in existing urban areas.

The planner observed that 85 to 95 per cent of Prince Edward's prime developmental land on the waterfront has been used.

He referred to shoreline from Carrying Place to Rossmore, the Glenora Road, and the West Lake-Cherry Valley Road.

The boater who wants to launch his craft in West Lake can utilize only one or two docks in Wellington.

Mr. Ahmed said that planners are eager to make property owners more conscious of rational land use so that they will co-operate with the goals of the county plan.

"If we don't work ourselves, we might be in a situation where the government is forced to act upon us," he cautioned.

Mr. Ahmed, a native of Pakistan, holds a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Pakistan and a Master's degree from a university in Turkey.

He has won International merit scholarships offered by the International Treaty Organization.

He arrived in Prince Edward in May, 1972, as advisor to the county planning board.

Entrants must secure at least $5 in mileage pledges or a flat sum, to be eligible as participants. Prizes of $50, $30 and $20 as well as merchandise prizes are to be awarded those securing the largest amount in pledges. There are also special prizes for the oldest lady, the oldest man and the rider from the greatest distance as well as for covering the course in previously determined safe speed. As well, all participants will be eligible for a draw for many excellent prizes.

Chairman of the event is Leland Ostrander of Cherry Valley with Clifford Fennell as vice-chairman. Pledge sheets are available and are to be turned in at the start of the events. Proceeds will be used for township recreation.

This is the third such event and they already made possible establishment of a softball diamond with lights and some other facilities which are to be increased this year. Athol softball league last season won all but one of seven championships in Prince Edward County.

Councillor Vernon Armstrong was elected as chairman in Clifford Fennell as vice-chairman, Mrs. James Atkinson as secretary, and Douglas Moore, treasurer.

William Brant at Work

Mohawk's New Chief Keeping Office Hours

TYENDINAGA RESERVE — Time is at a premium when the complexities of modern business administration are involved.

And the problem is just as pertinent on an Indian reserve like this.

That's why newly-elected Chief William Brant has set aside one afternoon a week to concentrate on being available to his fellow Quinte Mohawks in this reserve's administrative offices.

And already he's wondering if that's enough.

Elected chief at 32 last month, the young Mohawk council head figured the solution to easing pressure of reserve business was to be available at a specific time each week — each Tuesday from 1:30 p.m.

The pressure is such that the Mohawks — even on a reserve with a population of about 1,200 — now have a full-time administrator, says the chief.

Ellen Brant became the first full-time professional supervisor of the Mohawks' affairs when he graduated from Trent University last year.

As one of the reserve's busiest dairy farmers, the chief also needs much time to run his business. Hence the idea for specifically allocated one day a week to Indian office affairs.

"I just realized I couldn't handle it from home all the time," he said yesterday, Chief Brant's second Tuesday in full-time office session.

"What I'm trying to do is to keep both my business and reserve business separate as much as possible. By doing that I hope I can be more effective with both."

However, the phone still rings at home as reserve residents run into problems. Much work must also go home with him.

And he expects the number of people calling during office hours to increase as they become aware of the new practice.

"In most instances we can handle the problem right here in the office," says the chief. "And it allows us to deal with business more effectively and efficiently."

And even at this early date it's possible he'll be spending even more time in the office, Chief Brant indicates.

"I'm not sure if even a half-day here now is enough," he says. "We might have to extend it."

January Slump For Permits

TRENTON — The building permit department in Trenton's town offices is experiencing an "anticipated slump," as January draws to a close.

Norm Malfoy, the town's building inspector responsible for issuing permits, saidabout permits applied for have a value of $200,000 in properties this month — slow demand by the year's monthly average.

This early indicator of the year's business is comparable to last January. In both months six projects received permits.

Mr. Malfoy said the permits were mainly for residential structures and industrial additions. He anticipates issuance of permits will remain slow until at least the end of February and into early March, unless there is a strong break to warmer weather.

Collision Near Madoc

MADOC — A parked car owned by Aileen Brooks, RR 1, Madoc, received $225 damage Tuesday when it was struck by a car driven by John Alexander Aikinson.

The accident occurred on Madoc township road about three miles north of Highway 7.

Police said the road is only 16 feet wide at that point. The Aikinson vehicle received $50 damage.

Speaking Festivals To Begin

TRENTON — The annual school oral communications festivals are beginning again.

Sponsored by the Ontario Public School Trustees Association and Ontario Hydro, the public speaking contests climax each year with a provincial competition in Toronto.

Public and separate schools in Trenton are participating in a local competition Feb. 7 at 1 p.m. at College Street Public School. Winners of this event will compete in the county festival Feb. 15 at S.H. Conner School in Tweed.

The zone finals will be held Feb. 22 at Westdale Park School in Napanee. Zone finalists will go to the provincial festival in Toronto March 18.

Judges at the local festival in Trenton will be three members of the Bay of Quinte Toastmaster's Club. The public is invited to attend.

Residents Await OMB On Wooler Rd. Water

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Wooler Road residents are still without water as the months pass by after a go on Ontario Municipal Board decision.

Town council was criticized and petitioned in the latter part of last fall by residents complaining of no water. Apparently, at that time health authorities deemed the water in some wells unfit for consumption.

Since that time a number of householders "have been forced to get water where they can find it, bringing it home in cans," according to Emma Larcombe.

She is the wife of William Larcombe who, first approached council about the matter and saying the road residents deserved the water free from the town. He, along with a large group of residents, said the water was needed and the homeowners weren't prepared to pay for it.

At this points council. In an attempt to rectify the water problem advised Wooler Road residents they would be levied a local improvement bill for waterline installation.

Wooler Road residents said they wouldn't pay for the job and the matter was referred to the Ontario Municipal Board.

It has been about three months since the OMB was notified and there has been no reply.

Town deputy clerk Arden Royce said no date has yet been set for the OMB hearing that will decide one way or another whether the town or the residents are financially responsible for the job.

Until the OMB meets here Mrs. Larcombe says "we'll have to keep on borrowing or buying the water where we can."

Road residents claimed since they were annexed from Murray Township into the town of Trenton they weren't receiving the same benefits as the townsfolk.

Mrs. Larcombe said, "we did something out of our complaining though." Wooler Road residents now have their mail delivered.

Plan Bylaws For Meeting

TRENTON—The proposed zoning bylaws for Trenton's official plan will be unveiled at a public meeting in Christ Reform Church Feb. 5.

At this meeting, the suburban planning committee is looking for public input that can be used for any modifications to the bylaws which will provide the teeth for enforcing the official plan.

Following the public meeting, the Quinte Planning Board will assess public comment, make any changes and forward the document to town council for approval. From town council, the bylaws go the the Ontario Municipal Board where objections may be raised and adjudicated.

The meeting as scheduled for 7:30 p.m. and all pertinent information concerning the plan will be available.

Safety Device

"Since many people still won't wear seat belts, the automobile industry is experimenting with 'passive restraints' . . . air bags are the most publicized device which require no action by driver or passenger."

This is an extract from a booklet outlining nine ways to reduce the economic loss of car crashes and save lives published by the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

The use of air bags is a concept which has not gained full acceptance in the public mind, possibly because of conflicting reports as to their efficacy. Now however their time may have come, for advertisements are appearing in United States newspapers offering insurance discounts on vehicles equipped with them.

The advertisement has been placed by a large insurance group and it points out that one of the big three auto corporations is offering air bags on 50,000 of its 1974 cars in place of the currently mandatory seatbelt-ignition interlock system.

Expressing the hope that other car manufacturers will follow their example, the insurance company makes this observation in its ad: "There have been 15 real-life crashes of air-equipped cars, and the bag has never failed to inflate. Over 50,000,000 over-the-road miles have been logged with air-bag equipped cars. In every frontal-type crash at a speed high enough to cause serious injury, the bag worked perfectly. Only once, in all this driving, has the bag inflated inadvertently. In that instance, the car was brought to a safe stop easily and without incident. . ."

Accompanying the ad is a picture of a car (incidentally, of a different manufacture to the cars mentioned in the ad) which was equipped with an air bag. The driver collided with a parked car at 48 m.p.h., severely buckling the front end, but he walked away with only minor injuries.

Other pictures show how the bag inflates in a split second, protects the driver (it comes between him and the windshield), then deflates.

Given the appalling toll of lives on North American highways, this is a protective device that cannot be ignored. The insurance company indicates its confidence in it by providing a 30 per cent discount on the medical coverage portion of the auto insurance for cars so equipped.

Out of the Past

The film industry has undergone many changes in recent years. There has been a trend away from make-believe, away from musicals and happy endings, and toward greater realism, even harshness, not to mention the increasingly bold intrusions of pornography.

Only a handful of the stars people in middle-age knew so well on the screen are around anymore, and then often in small roles. Many are retired, or semi-retired.

Now and again though a name will crop up from the past. There is a film showing in Belleville right now, with Joanne Woodward in the principal role. Of course, Miss Newman and husband Paul Newman are among the most active performers in Hollywood these days, but also playing a role in this film is a star from long before even they came to prominence. We refer to Sylvia Sidney. More than a decade ago, in Ogdensburg, N.Y., we saw Miss Sidney, now 62, in a stage production and this must be one of her first movie roles in quite some time.

And women moviegoers not caught up too much in the women's lib thing will look back nostalgically to the heyday of performers like Miss Sidney. Another of the heart-throb, now 68, showed up as an Italian film producer in the television comedy series, That Girl, in recent days.

When names like these come before the public eye, it is as if time has stood still. Some may feel a shade younger again, and this is something a movie can do that gives the medium a certain charm, even in these days of heightened realism.

Charm Does It

Never underestimate the power of a woman. Yes, we have all heard that old saw . . . and of course it rings true. At Toronto airport 60 of the 100 people performing security checks on travellers, using electronic scanners, are women. The theory is that people don't object to searches nearly as often when carried out by members of the fair sex.

Canadians Only Sixth Most Highly Taxed in World

By VINCENT EGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomsen News Service

Here's something that might comfort you as you prepare your income-tax return this spring: Canadians are not the most heavily taxed people in the world. It only seems that way.

In fact, we rank sixth when total taxes are measured against the value of all the goods and services we produce. This is shown in a survey of 1970 figures—the latest available—published in the United Nations Yearbook of National Accounts Statistics, and reported in the current issue of the Canadian Tax Journal.

In Canada, government took 28.3 per cent of gross domestic product in 1970. The tax bite was biggest in Sweden, at 33.1 per cent of GDP, followed by the United Kingdom (32.6), Zambia, Israel and Ireland. The United States ranked thirteenth, with a government "take" of 23 per cent of GDP.

Here in Canada, the tax burden was almost equally divided between direct taxes (on earned income, property, capital gains, financial assets, net or total worth) and indirect taxes (those chargeable to the cost of production or services, or the sale, purchase or use of goods).

In the United States, direct taxes were 57.3 per cent of the total, in Sweden 53.1 per cent, and in Venezuela 72.3 per cent.

Households, unincorporated businesses and private non-profit institutions were the source of 74.1 per cent of Canada's 1970 revenues, with the rest being paid by the corporate sector. The U.S. figure was much the same—73.4 per cent—while Sweden's non-corporate sector ranked highest with 92.6 per cent.

Governments collect taxes, in part, so that they can provide services. So any measure of a country's tax burden must be related to the level of services its citizens receive from the state.

By this yardstick, Canada ranks twelfth. Social security benefits and social assistance in this country account for 25.6 per cent of total government disbursements.

What's first? Not Sweden, but France at 51.6 per cent. Following it in the welfare state sweepstakes are Luxembourg (47.8), Italy (45.5), the Netherlands (45.3), West Germany (39.9), Belgium (37.0), and Sweden (31.0).

The United States ranks fourteenth, at 24.9 per cent.

In brief, the figures show that the heaviest tax burdens are imposed on societies in which the state plays the most dominant role, and the lighter levies among those that foster individual initiative and enterprise.

But they also show that in both types of society, people's expectations of government services are constantly rising. Perhaps more people are prepared to buy greater public services through their taxes than is generally recognized.

CBC May Do a TV Series on John Diefenbaker

By STEWART MacLEOD

OTTAWA (CP) — Following the success of the CBC's 13-part series of the life of Lester Pearson, work has begun on a possible similar series about John Diefenbaker.

The 1972 CBC documentaries on Mr. Pearson formed the basis for the former Liberal prime minister's memoirs, and sources say the research being done on Mr. Diefenbaker likely will form the basis for books on his life.

"But it's too early to say whether we will get a television series out of this," a CBC official says. "We are still in the preliminary stages of the research." Any TV series would be at least two years away.

The research project is headed by John Munro, a CBC writer who played a key role in the Pearson series and won, with writer Peter Stursberg, best produce the memoirs. The third volume of these memoirs, called Mike, is in the final stages of preparation.

After recording most of his life for the CBC series, Mr. Pearson decided to turn the information into a written version. Most of the work was done by Mr. Munro and Mr. Ingles before the former prime minister worked on the final draft of his first volume.

About half of the second volume and all of the third were completed after his death.

Like Mr. Pearson, the former Conservative prime minister is retaining full rights to all the recorded material. He also has transcripts of about 16 hours of recorded conversations with broadcaster Peter Stursberg, who began interviewing him in 1968, originally for the CBC, but later in co-operation with the national archives.

In addition, Mr. Diefenbaker has recorded some of his memories on his own equipment and has had his executive assistant, Lee Richardson, take notes on others.

Mr. Munro spent about two weeks in Barbados with Mr. Diefenbaker during his Christmas holiday and since then has been spending about an hour a day with him.

Until the tapings with Mr. Richardson, Mr. Diefenbaker was not making much progress in organizing his memoirs.

His version of most of the controversial events of his 1957 to 1963 prime ministership were recorded either on tape or in writing, but apart from his early years on the Prairies, events had not been recorded on a systematic basis.

Now, regardless of what happens to the proposed TV series, there is said to be enough material on tapes to fill several volumes of memoirs.

Personal Touch Concern of MPP

By DON O'BEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — One of the most talked about members here, and also one of the most controversial, is Harry Parrott of Oxford.

Dr. Parrott got some semi-fame because the Globe and Mail picked him as a typical new member and at spaced intervals did a serious of articles on him and his colleagues.

And some of his reactions weren't all that good.

He was disappointed at the inability of private members to influence policy and get things done. And he thought the house was too rough.

Recently there has been some talk that the 45-year-old Wood-stock orthodontist might run in the federal seat in his riding, which is vacant.

This had led to some unkind cracks. That the member is too ambitious. That he is sulking because he hasn't been taken into the cabinet. That he's a prig.

Nothing could be further from the truth than these thoughts.

For those who know Harry Parrott well, know this fine, handsome man, as a deeply concerned person whose frustration is that he can't do enough.

In a recent budget speech, for example, he dwelt for some time on nursing homes.

And what troubled him most was that many of these were becoming "monolithic monsters" and impersonal.

He was thinking in terms of the loneliness of the people in these big homes which he becoming so prevalent.

He did have suggestions on more efficiency and better use of the health care system—that payments be graded according to the degree of service needed, for example—but this, he thought, was for the human element.

This feeling for humanity has shown through all Dr. Parrott's efforts here, and there has been very little evidence of strong personal ambition except the ambition to help people more.

In this, of course, he is far from being alone.

There are members in the house whose desire to help people centres on their desire to help themselves by higher places.

But then there are others where the heart far outweight personal ambitions.

There are a good many concerned members in the legislature and Harry Parrot is one of the best of them.

Hopefully he will stay here and not go to Ottawa.

Doctors Waive Fees For Operation on 6-year-old

Peterborough Examiner

North American doctors have been taking a public beating recently. The once-exalted image has become somewhat tarnished with reports of high annual incomes, malpractice suits and refusal to make house calls.

Two Florida doctors have polished up the image a bit by putting the life and health of a young boy above their own financial considerations.

Six-year-old Jody Dietrich was refused admittance to a Miami Beach hospital two months ago because his parents could not pay for heart surgery.

Jody had a faulty heart valve that ruled out the possibility for a normal life. His parents first took him to Variety Children's Hospital, but, because the family had no insurance to cover the operation, the hospital demanded a deposit. Jody's mother and father didn't have enough money.

A trust fund was immediately set up for the boy and $4,000 was collected before Dr. James R. Jude, Dr. Irwin R. Psaty and St. Francis Hospital stepped in. The money was not needed. The two doctors donated their skills and the hospital picked up the tab for the rest of Jody's care.

Thanks to the doctors and St. Francis Hospital, Jody is now doing "just fine." According to a hospital spokesman, he should be back in school within two weeks and riding his bicycle again in four.

The commendable actions of Jude, Dr. Pritchow and St. Francis Hospital are in sharp contrast to the decision of too many American hospitals. They also provide us with an opposite reflect upon the benefits of universal health insurance as it exists in Ontario.

OHIP, despite its flaws, protects us and our children from money-conscious negotiations like Variety Children's Hospital. We may be little blase about hospital admittance and doctors' services, we may be upset by reports of high incomes, but in the end we come out a happy way ahead of people in the U.S. who sometimes have to rely on charity and donations to get the medical services they need.

Historic Links Questioned

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

It is quite evident your Quinte Country reporter is following the advice given recently to the gentlemen who had criticized the writer on the authenticity of names, dates, places and personas who were called United Empire Loyalists. He reported he said that hand-me-down stories of local old-timers are better published than forgotten.

I am sorry, I don't agree, as it is a waste of one's time. If you find one or two errors you question the whole article.

To my knowledge, there have been three articles on the Reynolds House in Wellington within the past year in the two local papers. Similar questionable material has been used each time, which could have been copied from such books as Belden's Atlas, Pioneers of the Bay of Quinte, Picton 1837-1937 and Wellington 1863-1963 Centennial.

In some articles the Reynolds house is said to have been built as early as 1770. In this article it is said to have been built about 1786. It should be pointed out that "The first Loyalist settlers came into this area in October of 1784 and settled Fifth Town (Marysburgh), under Lieut. Archibald McDonnell the same summer that the first town ships were settled from Kingston up."

It could said Daniel Reynolds had been an officer in the American forces and at the end of the war returned to British soil. This would give the impression that Reynolds was a Loyalist. If we were to believe that after fighting on the rebel side he hurried back to settle among his enemies who were settled in what is now Marysburgh, not far distant?

We are next told that Mr. Reynolds, having completed his house, returned to his Canadian forest home with his 15-year-old wife, Nancy Wait. This leads one to suppose that Nancy Gardiner, that he married Daniel Reynolds in Charlottenburg Township Glengarry, Province of Quebec, Wright of Sophiasburgh, spinster, on April 1792 at St. Paul's Church, Ernestown, four witnesses.

We next find Lieut.-Gov. Simcoe and Mrs. Simcoe enroute to Newark and that Mrs. Simcoe was forced them to shelter at the Reynolds home where Mrs. Simcoe remained and remained for six weeks, cared for by the Reynolds family. This happened in 1792 when Gov. Simcoe was travelling by the Dundas Road, which supposedly passed the Reynolds home in what is now Wellington.

I suggest you look in Papers and Records of the Ontario Historical Society in Volume XXI, page 9.

It says "The construction of Dundas Street east of Toronto was let by contract in 1798 to one Asa Danforth, who came from the state of New York. The contract rate was $90 a mile, $60 per mile, for the whole distance from Toronto to Burlington, which was to be completed by July 1st, 1800. The date of the written contract section became known as the Danforth Road in 1798. There was no Danforth Road in 1792.

It would appear that Gov. Simcoe travelled to Newark by sailing ship as a letter (Kingston, July 27, 1792, Peter Russel to Simcoe) says: "I am exceedingly sorry to acquaint the Major-gue, which arrived yesterday that you had not reached Niagara before afternoon."

Mrs. Simcoe kept a very complete diary while in Canada, often with sketches; and like others I feel sure Mrs. Simcoe would not have been so remiss as not to have mentioned her six-weeks' sojourn during her illness, at the Reynolds home, of which there is no mention.

MPP Made $93,700 For One Acre

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says Jamieson Jones, Progressive Conservative member of the Ontario legislature for Port William, has made $93,700 on an acre of land which is to be used for an Ontario Housing Corp. (OHC) low-cost housing development.

In a copyright story from Thunder Bay, the newspaper says that on Oct. 4 Tome Jones and Sons Ltd. submitted a proposal to OHC to construct a 150-unit senior citizens' apartment building at a cost of $1,598,926.

At that date Mr. Jessiman and his wife still were registered owners of the proposed land site, says the newspaper report. It says that two weeks later Mr. and Mrs. Jessiman transferred title for the land, for which they paid $58,300, to Gwell Investments Ltd. for $150,000.

An OHC official is quoted by the newspaper as saying Gwell has an agreement "to sell the land to Jones. The proposed site abuts an existing senior citizens project opened officially six months ago.

Yvonne Moss, general manager of passenger sales, said the Turbo trips have frequently been sold out during the last month. The train has performed with total reliability since it was re-introduced to service before Christmas, she added.

Beef Rises

TORONTO (CP) — Some supermarket executives say that beef prices may rise 10 cents a pound this week.

Since early this month the wholesale price of dressed beef has increased 10 per cent, to about 90 cents a pound.

Inquest to Probe Hospital Building

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — An inquest into 23 deaths at Sudbury General Hospital was expected to begin delving today into the construction complexities of a $6.5-million new wing in which a crossing of medical gas lines has cost at least one life.

Somewhere in the mass of architectural and engineering evidence, investigators hope, lies an answer to why anesthetic nitrous oxide was carried into some rooms of the emergency section in lines that should have carried pure oxygen.

In seven days of testimony so far, the inquest has not yet learned exactly what room of the new wing received the switched gas, or on what dates.

The period of time under investigation is from last May, when sections of the wing began opening progressively, until September when six-year-old Catharine Dominic died in the special procedures room after minor anesthesia in connection with a broken arm.

The jury received evidence Tuesday that samples of gas taken Sept. 8 in that room and in the emergency treatment room were established by government laboratory tests to have come from the wrong outlets.

However, the inquest was told also by Virdas Skakkon, head nurse of the emergency department, that she had observed several patients given oxygen without ill effects in the emergency treatment room in the May-September period. She also said that before Miss Dominic died other patients had been given oxygen from the wall outlet in the special procedures room. She did not say how they reacted, and the impression was that they survived.

Without getting any information on the significance of the point, the jury also heard from Miss Skakkon that between May and September contractors' employees were working periodically on the medical gas lines. Occasionally, the lines were turned off for up to an hour.

The last such shutdown had been about a week before Miss Dominic's death.

Ann Landers

His Wife Finds Out She's The Cover-up

Dear Ann Landers: In a recent column a reader reported on the Gay Life. That was quite a letter. More recently millions of people had a chance to view first hand the Gay protester who blushed by the name of Bella Abzug as she and brazenly tried to take over the Today Show.

I'm writing about another kind of problem, however—on that is shared by more wives than you realize. What is she to do when, after several years of marriage, a woman discovers she is being used as a cover-up for a bisexual husband who prefers men?

My husband is a professional man, an accomplished lawsuite masculine—even sexy looking. I've tried everything and the final evaluation revealed that my husband has no respect for women and even less for wives.

I believe homosexuals should be permitted to marry each other. It would then preclude them from ruining the lives of women they use simply as decoys. Do you think we will ever live to see the day when homosexuals can legally marry each other!—The Cover Girl

Dear Girl: Yes, I do. But not for the reason you mentioned. Many homosexuals feel that the existing law laws discriminate against them. They believe that when they live as a "married" couple they should be permitted to file joint income tax reports.

Dear Ann Landers: I wish you could help me to say thank you to a teenager I met during my stay at Holy Cross hospital. All I know about her is that her first name is Debbie, and she is a Candy Striper who works Mondays and Wednesdays.

When I was a patient recently this darling teenager did small favors for me like brushing my hair, writing letters, feeding me, and straightening the bedclothes. She often came during her lunch hour when she was off duty to do "extra" things. I would wait for her and always felt better in her presence. The two things I remember most about Debbie are her smile and her sincere concern.

On my last day I did want to say goodbye to her but a nurse aide informed me that

Debbie had hurt her back while lifting a patient and she was in the emergency room waiting for X-rays. I left without saying thank you.

I hope you will print this letter, Ann. So often we hear of teenagers who are in trouble and rarely does anyone mention the good things others do.—Grateful

Dear G.: Here's your letter of thanks to Debbie. Now, may I add mine, not only to her, but to all the Candy Stripers who do such a wonderful job.

Dear Ann Landers: You have made it a point in your column to warn people about the "secret killer," high blood pressure, but you have never said anything about low blood pressure. My mother has had it for years and it worries me terribly, although she isn't the least bit concerned.

Can low blood pressure be dangerous? What should be done about it? Mom doesn't like doctors and hasn't seen one since my little sister was born six years ago. What do you say?—Charleston, W. Va.

Dear Char: I say it's time for her to see a doctor, whether she likes them or not. Sometimes low blood pressure is a symptom of real trouble. Your mother might have a thyroid problem, anemia or perhaps there's an infection somewhere in her body. Tell her she has been very foolish for the past six years and her luck might run out.

'Blue' Films Used For Sex Therapy

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Watching eight consecutive hard-core pornographic films is part of the therapy in a sex counseling program at Universality of California Medical Center.

"People say 'Do you show films?' and I have to say 'Yes,' but it's a process, it's not just showing a film," said Dr. Herbert E. Vandervoort, head of the school's human sexuality program.

Both commercial and documentary sex films are tools in the school's sexuality clinic's restructuring course. The course is for couples in coping skilling and for training health professionals.

"The course is to make people less uncomfortable in the general area of sexuality," said Vandervoort.

The weekend program opens with a four-hour Friday night session that includes the eight sex films to "desensitize."

"The commercial films aren't very accurate in terms of what people really do," Vandervoort said. Nine hours of a Saturday session therefore include a number of medical documentary films on sex.

He said studies indicate the program is about 96-per-cent successful in helping people overcome sexual difficulties.

The program staff has just completed "our first explicit sex film," an instructional documentary for women with sexual problems. It is the product of the 1½-year-old program's stated goal of making sex counselling less expensive, less dependent on professionals and more selected of the individual.

"We're emphasizing more and more a self-help approach to solving sex problems," Vandervoort said. "A couple in counselling can go home and do homework."

The counselling continues once a week for up to 12 weeks.

"If we haven't helped them in 12 weeks, they need another kind of therapy. That's long enough to reach their goals or to realize they really didn't want to reach them."

The counselling is not just for married couples; individuals also are accepted, mostly in groups.

Groups are used increasingly because of the number of demands for help. The staff has doubled in six months and more than 600 people have received counselling. But there is a waiting list of about 75.

The program, which grew out of a course for medical students in 1967, also deals with the barriers to successful sexual activity which confront some handicapped persons.

The program exists on grants and the fees from counselling and sale of materials.

"This means we have a lot of freedom—nobody knows what we are doing," Vandervoort said. "We haven't broken the law yet."

Successful Living

Who Gives Bride Away?

In the rosy glow that surrounds the engaged couple; in the excitement of showers, wedding parties; the honeymoon, John and Molly may ride on a pink cloud. They may also be delightfully in love and the present is the only time that matters.

Oh but, dear John and Molly, remember that you are both human. Remember that there are going to be clashes and differences of opinion and little weaknesses in your beloved. You married a human being, not a god or goddess —(and thank Heaven you did!) How could you live up to the perfection of a super-being? How, indeed, could such a one stand you?

Recently a friend of mine said her solution and her husband's, to getting along in marriage, was to make sure that when one got mad, the other remained steady. Anger often remained steady. Anger

Don't expect perfection. Expect and give warm, human love and understanding, and keep right on giving it. You'll receive it, usually.

Dear Doris: I am 21 and get, big married this spring. I have a problem about who should give me away, if anyone.

My father and mother have not lived together about two years old, but he writes to me and he sees me once or twice a year. I know that he really loves me.

But then he doesn't really love my mother I don't think — or she doesn't love him. For the past three years my mother has supported us by keeping house for a widower and I think of him almost like a father because he has been so kind. In one way I would like him to be the one to give me away, but I know that my father would be very offended. —Caught Between Two Fires.

Dear Caught: The giving away part is not essential, but it is nice. Give the honor to your father, if you can get your mother and him to act civilly toward each other for you wedding day. He obviously cares about you and naturally would be hurt, if someone else were publicly to displace him

Dear Doris: I have been married for a few years, but still without happiness. I have one adorable child, but my husband and I don't seem to understand each other. He gives me everything I want, but fights with me and says awful things. All this fighting has made me turn to another man, and now I'm not sure if I love my husband.

If this man asks me to go with him, what should I do? —Woman In Love.

Dear Woman In Love: Are you really in love with this other man? You should be very sure, before you think seriously of leaving your husband. It may be that you just need a sympathetic listener. You will find it if you seek marriage counselling, and you may be able to save your marriage at the same time.

Counselling is available at family service agencies. In small centres like yours it is the Regional Office of the provincial department of social services or welfare which will provide your counselor or guide you to one.

President of the Belleville General Hospital Women's Auxiliary Mrs. Carniff D. James Sullivan, retiring Ashley with Monsignor

President Reports

In her address to the annual meeting of the Belleville Auxiliary, President Mrs. Carniff Ashley thanked the volunteers who "have all worked hard making their particular job or commitment a success."

"It would be impossible to mention any one person, but to every volunteer and junior volunteer who has contributed whether in a large or small way, I say thank you."

Mrs. Ashley reported that she represented the auxiliary at many meetings and attended the graduations of laboratory technologists and Edith Cavell nurses. At the Junior Volunteer Mother and Daughter Tea, Mrs. Ashley presented pins to the young women.

She also represents the auxiliary on the Board of Governors.

"A highlight of the year which deserves special mention was the Dedication Service of the Meditation Room," she said. Mrs. Ashley added that "we can all be proud of our contribution to this effort."

Mrs. Ashley thanked Mrs. J.E. Nelles, convenes of the luncheon and musician Mrs. Kenneth Bird.

Hospital Chairman Addresses Auxiliary

"Hospitals can only economize so far and then the cracks and deficiencies begin to appear," Right Rev. Monsignor James Sullivan told members of Belleville General Hospital's women's auxiliary Wednesday.

Speaking to that group's annual meeting, the retiring Chairman of the hospital board of governors told the women that hospital trustees cannot accomplish a great deal by themselves.

"For hospital trustees to be effective, the provincial climate has to be bright."

"Whatever credit we give to those who have shaped this hospital as we see it now, is deserved principally because they were opportunists. At the same time when provincial conditions are restrictive, as they are now, hospital trustees do not deserve to be the targets of criticism."

The Monsignor outlined financial problems faced by hospitals across the province.

"The public which clamored for spending in the 60s became concerned about taxation. Still we felt more beds were needed. No sooner had the Quinte Tower been opened than we began to talk about adding more floors."

But, he added, in-hospital care came to have a disproportionate emphasis in the provincial health care system and so construction was for the most part frozen.

The emphasis was placed on bed utilization, he said.

He told the women that instead of building active treatment beds at $40,000 per bed and maintaining them at $60 to $70 per day, there was reclassification "down the line to, nursing home beds" which the government hopes will be built by private enterprise and maintained for $11 per day.

"There is tremendous merit in this plan but until it is completed there will be real hardship," he said.

Monsignor Sullivan said 100 nursing home beds are currently needed in this area.

"As patients are moved from one type of accomodation to another in order to release active beds, there is just no place for many of them to go."

Even these efforts, he said, were not sufficient to keep the Ministry of Health's budget in proper proportion to the provincial government's total spending.

"In just year there were financial restraints."

He said the result of speeding up treatment of those in active beds was to raise, not lower, operating costs.

"The result was that more patients were admitted to hospital . . . Intensive-treatment during the first days of a hospital stay are the most costly," he pointed out.

"Financial restraints which are meant to effect savings also work against savings because new programs and needed facilities are rendered impossible, he said.

"An example of this is the emergency service in most hospitals which needs expansion to cope with public demand. Ministry people keep emphasizing the difference between emergency, active and out-patient service, and there is a difference but it does not exist in the public mind.

"People want this hospital department to be 'a center for the delivery of primary health care and I think the government will have to go along with this way of thinking. The old concept is out-moded."

Monsignor Sullivan said that hospitals have generally met the challenge of financial restraints but this "may be giving the Ministry false hope that it can continue such measures."

He said hospitals can only economize so far. "As a people who are sick want seven day service.

"Illness is no respector of time, it makes the same demands on Saturday and Sunday as on Monday and Tuesday. Those in charge of staff have to recognize this, and in many cases do even better than they are doing now to cope with it."

He said if hospitals are restricted further, to limit increase in costs to six per cent, there would seem to be an injustice toward the people they serve.

This is the situation which hospital trustees "including our own" find themselves, he said. "They are not making the big decisions."

BGH Auxiliary Holds Meeting

Belleville General Hospital Women's Auxiliary held its annual meeting and luncheon Tuesday at Education Hall.

More than 100 persons gathered for the event, convened by Mrs. J.E. Nelles.

Head table guests, introduced by Mrs. Nelles were Mrs. J.H. Morey, Mrs. M.C MacLeod, Mrs. M.F.L. Jones, Rev. Donald Himmelman, representing the Ministerial Association; Mrs. B.E. Burley, Mrs. P.M. Till, Philip Rickard, administrator of Belleville General Hospital, Selma Bochnek, Monsigner James Sullivan, Mrs. Carniff D. Ashley, Mayor Robin Jeffrey, Mrs. George Wilson, Dr. A. G. Allen, representing the Medical Association, Mrs. C.A. Campbell, Mrs. W.G. Harvey, Kerry Marshall, director of nursing; Mrs. T.R. Colden, Mrs. Allan Grigg, Mrs. A.B. Duffy, and Mrs. E. Stewart.

In her greetings from the city, Mayor Jeffrey told the women she is impressed with the daily contributions of the volunteers. She said the gift and coffee shops are important to staff, visitors and patients. Part of the concern, interest and care the hospital gives patients is due to the volunteers, she said.

Dr. Allen told the women that everywhere the kindness and dedication of the women's auxiliary is evident.

Nursing Director Kerry Marshall also spoke of appreciation for the women's efforts.

Guest speaker Monsigner James Sullivan, retiring chairman of the Board of Governors, was introduced by Mrs. Ben Burley.

She said the Monsigner's "prominent positions in various efforts are widely and well known."

Monsignor Sullivan was appointed to the Board of Governors in 1965, she said and was elected chairman in 1969. She said that in 1968, he was chosen Man of the Year.

Year's Work Reviewed

At the meeting, reports were submitted by the following chairmen: The Hospital Volunteers, "Mrs. George Wilson: Opportunity Shop, Evelyn Campbell; Coffee and Gift Shops, Selma Bochnek; and the Recording Secretary, Joyce Till.

In-Hospital Volunteers: The service provides volunteers to assist in paediatrics playroom also transporting pictures, coffee shop, gift shop and to carry out in-hospital visiting. This year, the volunteers began assisting in the occupational therapy department.

During the years, 307 volunteers gave 21,514 hours to the hospital.

Opportunity Shop: In 1973, $13,000 was turned over to the hospital auxiliary by the Opportunity Shops. Also, 400 volunteers operate the shop six days a week.

Coffee and Gift Shops: The Coffee Shop, in its first full year of operation, contributed $5,350 to the Auxiliary; the gift shop, $4,100.

In her report, recording secretary Joyce Till outlined the years activities. She said 44 members joined; paid membership is 297. Mrs. Ben E. Burley issued 10 monthly bulletins. Mrs. M.F.L. Jones, chairman of public relations, arranged monthly meeting programs and represented the auxiliary on the volunteer recognition committee of the Central Volunteer Bureau.

During the year the Samaritan Cupboard Committee, convened by Mrs. M.C. MacLeod kept the hospital supplied with layettes, which are given to Mothers for infants in need of clothing when they leave the hospital.

Chairman of the Purpose Committee, Mrs. E.V. Stewart reported that her committee of 13 active members made, and placed in the Paediatrics ward of the hospital, 415 puppets during the year. These are given to young patients upon discharge.

Another committee contributing In-Hospital service is Holiday Treats of which Mrs. Alan Twigg is Convenor.

Special days such as Christmas, Easter, St. Valentine's Day, Mother's Day and others were marked by distribution of small gifts to hospital patients. Included were tray favors made by a number of Girl Guide Companies and Brownie Packs of the District and C.G.I.T. group of city churches.

Today's homemakers — be they male or female — must be canny shoppers to make the best use of their grocery dollar.

PLAN TO SAVE: Plan meals for at least a week in advance using the weekly A&P ads, to take advantage of price specials and to plan variety in menus. Plan to buy products that are in season when they are usually at their cheapest. Check your cupboards and make a complete list of all items you intend to purchase and stick to the list when you shop.

Group similar items on your list—e.g. meats, produce, canned goods, etc., so that it will be easy to follow the list in the store. Plan to be flexible. If you see a special buy—such as the many on this week's "Do-It-Safe" at A&P—plan to stock up and save. Buy in quantity when the price is right but only the amount you can easily store and use up before it would spoil.

COMPARE TO SAVE: Analyze and compare the cost of convenience products against the quality cost and time of preparing similar "from scratch" items.

Read labels on packaged foods. Choice or Standard quality canned goods are just as nutritious as fancy quality and are usually cheaper. Large packages may be more economical, but be sure that you can use it all in a reasonable length of time.

STORE FOODS PROPERLY TO SAVE: Buy amounts that you can store easily. Vegetables such as potatoes can be stored in a dry cool, dark place for, at least, period. Extra stocks of canned goods can be stored in the basement or shelves or in cartons in an out-of-the-way location.

Label and date packages to be stored in the freezer. Be sure to rotate your food supplies so that the first purchased is the first used. Refrigerate any leftovers in covered containers and be sure that they are used within a few days.

COOK FOODS PROPERLY TO SAVE: Fresh fruits and vegetables are perishable—use them within a few days. Frequently serve fruits and vegetables raw for the maximum food value.

Group Questions Legality Of Pickering Garbage Dump

PICKERING, Ont. (CP) — The Ontario Municipal Board (OMB) adjourned Tuesday a hearing on garbage rezoning until the legality of a bylaw passed by a now-defunct municipal council can be determined.

OMB officer F. G. Blake said the hearing will be adjourned for up to 30 days to allow for clarification of legal difficulties resulting from the creation of the Town of Pickering, part of the Durham region, and the abolition of the township of Pickering.

The old township, dissolved Jan. 1, entered into an agreement with Metropolitan Toronto in 1971 to ask for rezoning of three sites so that Metro's garbage might be dumped there.

Metro has received conditional approval from the provincial environment ministry for use of the Liverpool Road landfill site, providing that rezoning is approved by the OMB.

After legal presentations by counsel for a citizen's organization, Group Against Garbage (G.A.G.), the OMB chairman ruled that three points require legal clarification:

—Whether the old township bylaw is, in fact, still in existence now that the Town of Pickering has to face its consequences.

—Whether the successor municipality, the Town of Pickering, has the right to continue the township's application for OMB approval.

—Whether the new municipality must reenact the bylaw or pass a resolution to that effect if it wishes to proceed with the landfill plans.

The bylaw in question is for the rezoning of more than 300 acres of a Liverpool Road site. Metro paid $126,000 to the old township for use of the land and agreed to an additional charge for each ton of garbage dumped.

Metro has been dumping garbage at the site for more than two years and is seeking permission for dumping at two other sites.

Tom Beckett, a Hamilton lawyer representing G.A.G., told the hearing that his interpretation of Bill 191, which established the Durham region, makes the disputed bylaw invalid.

He said the act provides that all bylaws in force as of Jan. 1 had to be assumed by the successor municipality, but the rezoning bylaw in question was still in the process of being approved and, hence, did not have to be taken up by the successor.

Mr. Blake and Mr. Beckett agreed that a simple solution would be for the new council to pass a new rezoning bylaw if it so wishes.

Mr. Beckett told the hearing he intends to pursue the legality of the old bylaw to divisional court and, if necessary, to the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Jack Anderson, a councillor on the old township council and a member of the new town council, said he doubts the new council would approve a new bylaw.

George Mace, counsel for Metro, told the hearing there are several avenues to determine the legality of the bylaw quickly so that the OMB hearing can resume.

The avenues include a special ministerial order or an interpretation of the new regional act—Bill 192, Mr. Mace said.

Ten Contractors' Property Damaged

TORONTO (CP) — More than $750,000 damage was done in six months to property of contractors who refused in 1968 to sign agreements with a union of concrete formers, a police inspector said Tuesday.

Inspector Bruno Diciaio told a royal commission hearing labor violence in the construction industry that 10 companies refused to sign with Local 562 of the Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers (Concrete Forming Division), headed by Bruno Zanin; and Gus Sinclair. Five of the firms were damaged between August, 1968, and February, 1969.

Nine fires and other acts of damage occurred at the premises and job sites of the firms, he said.

Those hit the worst were Frar-Kiri Forming Co., Ltd., Leader Masonry and Forming Co. and Del Zotto, which signed agreements with the council of Concrete Forming Trade Unions, a competing group.

Earlier, two men refused to be sworn or to testify at the inquiry and it was announced they would face charges of contempt.

Judge Harry Walsberg, conducting the construction inquiry, said Thomas Kiroff and Charles Yanover, who appeared Monday, would be brought before divisional court on charges of contempt.

Their names have been mentioned in connection with the labor bombings of Acme Lathing Ltd. and Gemini Lathing.

Judge Walsberg said he had heard earlier evidence in closed session by the two men and he had twice "been asked to be considered their testimony to be "essential" and "vital to the inquiry."

John Rosen, counsel for Kiroff, tried unsuccessfully Monday to prevent public disclosure of evidence regarding his client.

Witnesses said Monday Kiroff had about 15 sticks of dynamite that could have been used in the lathing company bombings.

Judicial Board Hears Evidence in Dismissal

CORNWALL, Ont. (CP) — A judicial board of reference is inquiring into the firing of francophone teacher Jacques Boyer was told Tuesday he was fired for a "low, shabby standard of conduct."

The comment was made by Fraser Campbell, chairman of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry board, of education, who testified for 4½ hours about the board's firing last May, following a student strike in March.

Mr. Campbell told Judge A.W. M. Dubrule of Brockville, who is chairman of the board of reference, that Mr. Boyer "inspired and satisfied" in a series of events before and after the student strike.

Meanwhile, about 150 students from Ecole Secondaire La Citadelle—the school from which Mr. Boyer was fired—march in protest outside the hearing.

Mr. Campbell said the school board has done nothing to substantiate the contents of a report by two of its superintendents which was used as the basis for the firing.

He said the report states at its beginning that it was based on "hearsay evidence and neither of the two authors was willing to vouch for its contents."

Lawyer Hyman Soloway of Ottawa, acting for Mr. Boyer, told the inquiry Mr. Boyer's activities during March were in keeping with his job as staff member to the student council.

Lorne Lawson, a superintendent for the school board, said Mr. Boyer "orchestrated" the students pretending their demands for a francophone school of their own—in which French is used as the language of instruction.

Courthouse Shot Up With Policeman's Gun

RICHMOND HILL, Ont. (CP) — Four bullets, believed fired from a gun taken from the holster of a Metropolitan police man during a brawl in a hotel near here, struck the provincial courthouse in this community, north of Toronto Tuesday. No one was hurt.

Police said the brawl began late Monday in the hotel after a plainclothes officers stopped to talk to members of a motorcycle club. They said they were jumped and within minutes everyone in the room became involved in a brawl.

The officer discovered his .38-calibre special revolver was missing after the fight.

Police carried out a number of raids Tuesday looking for the gun.

They said the raids "were all over the place" in Toronto and York region and "we're a little closer to it."

The courthouse was in order when a cleaner left about 8:30 a.m. Monday but when officers arrived Tuesday morning they found a glass front door and vestibule door shattered by two bullets. Two more bullets went through a door jamb and love drapes.

Charged with assault on the policemen were Wayne Patrick Taylor, 21, of Toronto, and Barry Paliesan, 23, of Bradford, Ont.

Induced Labor Leads To Respiratory Trouble

MONTREAL (CP) — Infants born by induced labor are more prone to the Respiratory Distress Syndrome, a condition of weakened lungs that accounts for the death of one in six babies during or shortly after birth, a Montreal medical professor said Tuesday.

Babies not born during spontaneous labor are more likely to have a deficiency of cortisol, a hormone formed by the adrenal gland, said Beverely Murphy, an associate professor of medicine at McGill University.

Without adequate cortisol, insufficient surfactant or surface-active agent is created to make an infant's lungs strong and elastic, she told a news conference at the Canadian Society for Clinical Investigation annual meeting.

MEMO FROM HELEN GAGEN

These days of high meat prices, why not serve an egg main dish, reinforced with a little cheese or leftover meat or poultry, for one dinner each week? There are many egg recipes that families enjoy at least as much as some meat and fish dishes — and they can be both nourishing and money-saving. At today's prices, two large eggs cost about 14 cents. And they provide top quality protein in an amount which, along with other protein-containing foods that belong in your day's protein contribution (about your iron, as well, a couple of eggs make one-quarter contribution toward your iron, calcium and vitamin A. Consider such dinner menus as:
*Corn custard; crisp bacon garnish; lettuce salad; crackers and cheese.
*Scrambled hard-cooked eggs on rice with cheese sauce; stewed tomatoes; bran muffins; dessert of muffins with jam or syrup.

Federal Plan Calls for Oil At $8 in '76

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government tabled a complex new oil policy at opening sessions of the national energy conference Tuesday and Alberta reserved judgment on the crucial question of long-range western crude oil prices.

The policy, outlined by Energy Minister Donald Macdonald, drew mixed reaction from the 10 provincial premiers, most approving some aspects but faulting it heavily on others.

The policy spelled out two main goals:

—To raise western crude oil from the current frozen price of $4 to $8 a barrel by sometime in 1976.

—To subsidize petroleum prices in the five eastern provinces where little domestic oil is used and markets are supplied by costly overseas crude, now nearly triple the frozen domestic price.

Mr. Macdonald said the subsidy would be 12 or 13 cents a gallon for gasoline and heating oil, enough to offset a large retail increase scheduled to take effect Feb. 1.

If approved by the conference, he said, the subsidy will be paid at the refinery level and the main impact for consumers will be to hold petroleum prices close to existing levels.

It will not lower the cost of heating oil or gasoline in the five eastern provinces or wipe out the current price gap of six to eight cents a gallon that exists between petroleum prices in the eastern and western sections of the country.

Domestic oil, largely from Alberta, supplies all markets in the five western provinces except for a small section of southeastern Ontario. It is lumped with the five eastern provinces in the large market dependent on overseas oil.

Although Canada produces enough oil th meet all its needs, there is no way to ship large volumes of domestic crude into the eastern market without extending the interprovincial crude oil pipeline.

It now stops at Sarnia, Ont., but the government has announced plans to extend it to Montreal by late 1975. Eventually the line will be expanded into a coast-to-coast supply system.

The domestic pricing policy outlined by Mr. Macdonald would boost the current $4 wellhead price to $6 May 1, the date when the domestic price freeze, agreed to by Ottawa and major oil companies in September, is lifted. Another $1 increase, to $7, would be allowed in 1975 and a final increase to $8 in 1976.

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta doomed any hope of quick agreement on the proposal by saying Tuesday night he will not accept, negotiate or even discuss the offer until after he returns home from the two-day meeting and has time to study it in detail.

He said Alberta, which produces 85 per cent of domestic crude oil, must consider the enormous implications of the scheme before passing judgment.

What impact his stand will have on the outcome of the conference is unclear. The development was rated serious by some conference participants but one senior spokesman said the premiers had agreed privately not to end the conference without making progress.

Mr. Macdonald said a $6 a barrel wellhead price would produce $3 billion annually in new oil revenues and the money should be shared by the producing provinces, the oil industry, the federal treasury, and eastern consumers.

He proposed that $1.45 billion be used to achieve a one-price oil policy, largely through continued eastern subsidy payments. A total of $940 million should be returned to the producing provinces and the federal government should keep $200 million.

He said this would leave $500 million for industry exploration and development of new energy sources.

Mr. Macdonald said at a news briefing the producing provinces may not accept the plan. In particular, they could be upset about the amount of money they would receive. If so, it might be possible to reduce the share allotted the industry and raise the amount for the producing provinces.

Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan objected strongly to some aspects of the plan after first hearing it but, like Premier Lougheed, took no firm immediate position.

Mr. Macdonald confirmed in his conference statement, that the Ottawa plans to use funds from the controversial federal export tax on crude oil to finance the eastern subsidy until new arrangements take effect May 1.

Until Feb. 1, the date when the subsidy would begin, the federal government is committed to returning, directly or indirectly, all export tax revenue to the producing provinces. After Feb. 1, it plans to hold back half the funds.

Mr. Macdonald said the federal share of the export tax revenue, expected to total roughly $250 million between Feb. 1 and April 30, will not be enough to pay for the subsidy plan. An additional $75 million would be needed.

He suggested raising this amount from the new money available when domestic prices rise May 1.

The fate of both the subsidy program and the long-range pricing concept hinges on some agreement being reached by Ottawa and the producing provinces. Chaos will result if this does not come about, Mr. Macdonald said.

Both Alberta and Saskatchewan have passed legislation to give them effective control over wellhead prices and both have called for large price increases.

The Saskatchewan legislation, which Mr. Blakeney says will go into effect Feb. 1 unless the conference produces an alternate solution, would raise prices to roughly $9 a barrel or more. Alberta has not set a specific figure but has indicated it wants a similar amount.

The subsidy scheme was welcomed in principle by Atlantic premiers but they were critical of the fact that it would not reduce prices and wipe out the east-west price gap.

Premiers Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia and Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick pressed the point hardest and were joined by Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec in calling for a uniform national oil price immediately.

Premiers Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island and Frank Moores of Newfoundland saw some benefit in the federal plan, but agreed they had less at stake than other Atlantic provinces because they have less heavy industry consuming large volumes of fuel.

Premier William Davis of Ontario took a comparatively small part in conference discussions as the focus fell on the federal proposals and the effects they would have on producing and import-dependent provinces.

Premiers Ed Schreyer of Manitoba and Dave Barrett of British Columbia, both New Democrats, urged Ottawa to move toward public ownership of energy resources and away from control by multi-national corporations.

Premier Barrett said he would relinquish provincial jurisdiction over resources if the federal government acted decisively in this direction.

Oil Tax Changes Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The controversial issues of gasoline rationing and energy conservation have taken a temporary back seat to a growing congressional demand for a change in oil company tax breaks.

Senator Henry Jackson says tax policy, "instead of encouraging energy development in the U.S., has made the Arab nations self-sufficient."

The Washington Democrat spoke Tuesday as his investigations subcommittee wound up its second day of quizzing oil company executives on the extent of the energy crisis.

Senate finance chairman Russell Long (Dem. La.), who last month led a filibuster against emergency energy legislation because of a provision to limit excess profits by the oil industry, said he would be willing to support tax legislation that would induce the companies to turn their attention to exploration and development at home.

The emergency bill, which would give Nixon power to order gas rationing and mandatory energy conservation measures, remained stalled by the continuing threat of a filibuster by Republicans and oil-state senators who oppose the excess profits provision. Long said he would not join the filibuster this time, but other senators vowed to stop the bill from coming to a vote.

Questions and Answers On Highway Travel

Ontario Motor League - Eastern Ontario Club

QUESTION: We are driving to Mexico and want to spend some time in Acapulco. Can you give us any details about the city?

ANSWER: The oldest and most congested parts of Acapulco fill a peninsula that forms the western side of the bay. Modern hotels with spectacular views dot the precipitous cliffs to the west; the bustling and jai-alai fronton are in this sector. Flanking the bay on the northwest is the main centre of the city; with its business district, tourist facilities, banks, car rental agencies, and shopping arcades. In addition to the market, Old Acapulco has a Moorish-appearing cathedral which overlooks the central downtown square; it was erected from parts of an uncompleted movie theatre. Along the bayfront of this section are the dock area, fishermen's wharves and Fuerte de San Diego.

Along the bay runs the scenic highway named for former President Miguel Alman, who was responsible for much of the resort development of Acapulco. In the central bay area, this highway passes the newer, ultra-modern luxury hotels. Beyond the junction with Mac. 95, the coastal drive follows the rugged eastern arm of the bay towards Puerto Marques and the airport.

Accommodations in Acapulco range from low-cost pension rooms to luxurious coast with private pools terraced into the sides of a cliff. There is something to fit every budget and satisfy every taste. In general, peak season rates are in effect during the winter tourist season; lower rates may be obtained by visiting from May through mid-November.

Most of the hotels have restaurant facilities offering a wide selection of international cuisine as well as local Mexican specialities. Atmosphere and international entertainment offerings vary with the place. Visitors will find it interesting to try the dining facilities in hotels other than their own. Remember that lunch is rarely eaten before 1 or 2 p.m. and dinner starts at 9 or 10 p.m.

The temperature in tropical Acapulco varies only a few degrees throughout the year; the average temperature being 80 F. The main tourist season is during the winter months, from December to Easter, when the water is still pleasantly warm enough for swimming.

Dress, as in most international coastal resorts, is casual and colorful, even in the evening. Cool, lightweight clothes are in order, and the most comfortable, yet still fashionable, visitors can spend most of the time clad in little more than a smile and a tan.

The chief shopping section is near the city's centre and along the waterfront. In the narrow streets and curved lanes of the old section of town are many little shops selling clothing, jewelry and curios; stands in the market vend all sorts of colorful items and typical dishes.

In general, shopping in Acapulco tends to be more expensive than in the rest of Mexico; at any rate, in the market stands, remember that the time-honored custom of bargaining. Stores and most places of business usually close for long lunch breaks, so be sure to check on their hours of opening.

Popular purchases are leather goods, pottery, hand-blown glassware and Taxco silver, but the greatest volume of business involves resort wear. Mexican styles for men and women, such as tasseled and embroidered shirts, may be found. Many smart boutique-type shops deal in resort slacks, shifts and various styles made to order from locally purchased fabrics. In addition to the market and separate stores, most of the hotels have speciality shops.

MORE

Acapulco's nightlife is gay and varied. It also tends to be quite late, beginning around 11 after dinner and lasting until the wee hours of the morning. Most of the activity centres around the bars and clubs in the hotels; be sure to try several for cocktails, dinner and dancing. There are also numerous discotheques for the "go-go" crowd.

The Acapulco Folklore Ballet theatre features native dances. The Ski Club stages nightly professional performances, called Holiday on Skis, at 10.30; admission to this spectacle costs 60 pesos.

In spite of the variety offered by Acapulco's many nightspots, by far the most famous night-time attraction is the diving from La Quebrada. From a tourist spot atop a cliff, a young native boy plunges from the top of the cliff 135 feet into a narrow cove, bordered by treacherous rocks. The diver hits the water at 60 m.p.h. The success of the spectacular dive depends not only on skill, but especially on split-second timing, due to the tide which fills the cove with swirling surf and then quickly recedes, leaving the water level in the cove dangerously low for a brief period.

Sightseeing in and around Acapulco involves primarily scenic attractions. Horse-drawn carriages are available for tours of the city. Rental cars and jeeps make it possible for visitors to drive themselves along the coastal roads for fine views and magnificent scenery.

Particularly interesting along the bayfront drive is the afternoon exhibition of the day's catch of the fishing pliers. Buses and limousines provide guided tours of the immediate vicinity of Acapulco; the fares vary according to the destination. Small planes are available for trips into the jungle. Morning and afternoon yacht cruises around the bay are offered, as well as moonlight trips. Glass-bottomed boats provide special views of the brightly colored small fish that inhabit the bay, as well as a close look at the Virgin of Guadalupe. These boats leave from the Ski-Club twice daily.

Police Pal Movement Expands

WINNIPEG (CP) — A number of years ago little Herbie Foster unloaded a snowball at one of Winnipeg's police cruisers, drilling the driver, Insp. Jim Bruton, in the ear.

The inspector jumped out of the car and as little Herbie's legs were no match for the athletic policeman, Mrs. Foster was greeted at her door by her young son anchored by an parlobe to the long arm of the law.

The Winnipeg realtor looks back on the memory now with a chuckle.

"When Insp. Bruton discovered he had my mother came from the same part of Ireland, I was saved. She poured him a cup of tea and they talked for two hours while I made myself as inconspicuous as possible."

Since 1970 Herb Foster has been promoting friendship between kids and policemen in a movement he founded—Police and Pal.

From that meagre beginning three years ago when 75 boys and 75 policemen competed in a golf tournament, Police and Pal has expanded to a week-long affair with more than 700 boys—and for the first time this year, girls involved.

Activities which include everything from pistols in small-bore rifle shooting to fishing boys from the opposite police ranks have drawn volunteer participation as well as policewomen from throughout the province as well as support from the Manitoba police commission.

Mr. Foster says inquiries continue and he doesn't have come from as far away as Miami, Fla. and a similar operation has been started in Superior, Wis.

But the realtor's greatest pleasure at the movement goes one step further: "Someday I hope there will be enough funds for pals of the police."

Island Near Nairobi Clings to Traditions

LAMU, Kenya (Reuter) — In this ancient Arab town on the edge of the Indian Ocean, time is no matter of deep concern.

For Lamu, built on an island, possesses only two cars.

Both belong to the government, and nobody really knows why it brought them here. There is scarcely a mile of motorable road in town. The main street is a little narrower than a modest double bed.

You get around on foot or on the back of a donkey—and most of the 8,000 Lamuans prefer it that way.

They are Arabs and Swahilis (people of mixed Arabian and Bantu stock) whose civilization goes back, all but unchanged, for 1,000 years.

"In Lamu," says a new guidebook, "you find a vibrant society in a love-marriage with its traditions: Lamu people are dubious about the merits of what we would call progress."

Wooden sailing dhows ride gracefully at anchor in the port. Lanterns, not electric lights, illuminate most of the centuries-old Arab mansions built of coral stone, that dominate the town. An old-world courtesy and charm governs the way people behave.

Lamu's fort has become the government jail, brooding over the main square like the Bastille in pre-revolutionary Paris. But it is scarcely overcrowded. Crimes of violence are virtually unknown here. You can walk the dingy, unlit streets after dark in safety.

Kenya's go-ahead government in Nairobi finds Lamu a puzzle. It had to cancel a beauty contest to be held here for the 10th anniversary of Kenyan independence, because there were no entries in this fervently Moslem community.

"Would you let your wife or your sister cavort about like that?" demanded one indignant young Swahili.

Lamu's district commissioner, an up-country Meru tribesman called Benson Kaaria, dwells in sometimes baffled seclusion at a home built atop the island's only substantial hill—outside the town.

He governs in concert with Lamu's Swahili elders, tall, dignified men clad in flowing white robes, known as Kanzus, who carry canes with the same aplomb as an English stockbroker does his umbrella.

The women go out modestly veiled in black head-to-toe garments called buibuis.

"You are back in history here," said one of fewer than ten dozen white residents. The question is: Can Lamu survive?"

By African standards, Lamu's inhabitants seem to have plenty of money in their pockets. They export cotton, charcoal and the best mangrove poles in the world—the wood, shipped by dhow, is much in demand in Arabia as a building material.

Economically, however, the island is stagnant and many younger people—and the Kenya government—seek to build up the tourist industry. There are three fine tourist hotels and regular flights to the airstrip, located just across the harbor, from Nairobi and other Kenyan centres.

If, however, tourism is to develop, the island will be paradise only for the wealthier, more discerning foreign visitor.

Lamu's elders would quickly frown on an influx of European package tourists of the kind who flock, in search of low-budget sunshine and sex, to resorts like Watamu and Malindi further down the Kenyan coast.

Beyond the sand dunes on Shella Beach here you can, discreetly, bathe in the nude. But strolling Lamu's main street in shorts would quickly incur public wrath.

Autoline May Reduce Fishermen's Troubles

SHELBURNE, N.S. (CP) — Hard work and long hours are the traditional lot for longline fishermen but an automated system aboard the Shelburne longliner Marlene and Kyle may change all that.

Longliners, so called for the long strings of hooks they troll behind them, are the last remaining Atlantic Canadian fishing vessels that use baited hooks to catch fish commercially.

What makes longlining so much work is the effort required to bait up the many hooks, haul in the lines and keep the hooks from tangling.

The system aboard the Marlene and Kyle was installed by the Nova Scotia fisheries department, which has chartered the longliner for the experiment in cooperation with the federal fisheries branch.

The autoline, as the system's Norwegian developers have named it, consists of several components, each designed to reduce the work in part of the longlining operation.

The most intricate part is a baiting machine, which can slice mackerel into bait-size chunks and set them on the hooks at a rate of 100 hooks a minute. Other components haul in the line and place it on storage rails.

Human hands are needed only to remove the fish from the hooks and to discard the gear.

The Marlene and Kyle has been using the equipment for three months.

Catches have been moderate so far but the crew is enthusiastic about its capabilities.

The machine can bait and let out as much line in two hours as can be done in six hours by conventional methods.

"In all my years of fishing this is the easiest rig I've ever seen," said one crew member.

Slept On Sleepers

WATFORD, England (CP) — Bonny, a junkman's elderly horse, lay down on a railway crossing and nothing would budge him. Two trains were halted, traffic built up and hundreds gathered with suggestions. Finally the fire brigade hoisted the sleepy nag off the line with a breakdown crane.

Island Resort

New Brunswick Islands Offer Ideal Vacations

WELSHPOOL, N.B. (CP) — Surrounded by the sparkling blue waters off New Brunswick's southern coast, Campobello and Deer Islands post like guards near the mouth of Passamaquoddy Bay.

Rocky and tree-covered, the islands stand a stone's throw from the Canada-United States border, separated from the coast of Maine by narrow channels swelling, then shrinking with the tide.

They offer nearly-deserted beaches and rocky cliffs. Or days exploring tiny communities and coasts cut and notched by bays, inlets and coves.

Great Duck Pond, Man of War Head, Little Whale Cove, Fairhaven, Windmill Point, Chocolate Cove, Bull Dog Beach, Smuggler Cove, Old Sow Whirlpool, Schooner Cove.

The islands are rich in the history of sea captains and wooden ships, including a family dynasty boasting a captain and two admirals in the Royal Navy. And there are stories of buried pirate's treasure.

Although the islands are small, under 10 miles from tip to tip in both cases, few coves away unimpressed by the beauty of their natural setting.

Channels and passages winding their way between the islands shimmer in bright sunlight.

Fog banks roll in from the Bay of Fundy, blotting out the sun and producing the mournful wail of fog horns and the shrill whistles of tiny fishing boats seeking anchorage.

Even on the warmest days, the waters off the islands are chilly and swimmers need determination and a stiff constitution.

The islands play host to their share of visitors during the two-month summer tourist season. Motels and rental units are becoming more common but there are few of the garish tourist traps that have blighted other areas.

They still retain their sense of isolation, their people rooted in their fishing, mainly the chase of the now-elusive herring.

An automobile ferry links Deer Island with mainland New Brunswick the year round and a second ferry connects the two islands in summer. During the winter, residents of Campobello depend on the international bridge joining them with Lubec, Me. From there, it is a drive of about 40 miles along the Maine coast to St. Stephen, N.B.

The Abnaki Indians credited creation of the Passamaquoddy Islands to Glooskap, a great chief. According to the legend, he came upon a pack of wolves who had chased a deer and a moose from the woods. Just as they were moving in for the kill, Glooskap changed them all into islands.

Today, Campobello is best known as the site of the summer home of the late U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt and a Canada-United States International Park surrounds the rambling, red-shingled building.

But the most colorful history of the islands took place decades earlier.

Campobello was first settled by hardy French, who built homes along the shore. Champlain was said to have sailed the waters around the islands and touched ashore.

But after the fall of the French empire in North America, Campobello, then known as Passamaquoddy Island, was granted by Lord William Campbell, governor of Nova Scotia, to Capt. William Owen of the Royal Navy. Hence the name Campobello, partly because of its owner and also its beauty as the name means "fair field."

Owen returned to England a few years after bringing settlers to the island but his two sons joined the British navy and rose to the rank of admiral.

The second son, Admiral William Fitz-William Owen, returned to Campobello in the mid-1830s, living at the island between tours of duty.

He built a home overlooking the coast, planted English oaks and put up a planked walk on the rim of a cliff where he could imagine himself on the high seas.

At four o'clock each day, he and his family would dine on silver and gold-lined dishes. The carpet in the dining room was said to be a gift of the King of Prussia.

There were stories of smugglers who spent most of their time digging in woods near a fresh water pool on the island, searching for Spanish doubloons buried by pirates.

In 1879, the property belonging to the Owen family was bought by U.S. syndicate which promoted Campobello as a summer resort. Much of the land has since been sold.

Deer Island was originally granted to Joseph William Gorham, later appointed commandant of Newfoundland.

He sold the grant to Thomas Farrell, who built a home at Chocolate Cove in 1810, living on the island until 1823 when he died at the age of 93.

He had welcomed settlers and sold them land. Homes and churches were built near protected coves and inlets, the people dependent on farming and fishing.

With the addition of tourism, much the same situation exists today.

Deer Island boasts the world's largest lobster pound, located at Kalamoes Crick. Operated by Conley's Lobsters Ltd., the pound has a system of gates which allows seawater to flow in and out with the 28-foot tide.

Because of the importance of the fisheries and tourism to the islands and the surrounding areas, the Canadian government has objected to a proposed route for supertankers down Head Harbor Passage between the two islands.

The tankers would feed a proposed $350 million refinery at nearby Eastport, Me., but the Maine board of environmental protection has yet to make a decision on the company's application to build.

In a submission to the board, the New Brunswick government said oil spills in the passage would cover the surrounding shorelines and, under some conditions, perhaps reach as far south as Cape Cod.

Point Anne Plant Will Stand Until Spring Before Razing

It will now be early spring before there's a start on the lengthy process of razing Canada Cement Lafarge's abandoned Point Anne plant.

Task of removing equipment then demolishing the entire production complex will likely begin with the arrival of finer weather in March, B. M. Brannen, Point Anne's last manager said Tuesday.

Earlier it had been reported that first phase in the demolition operation would begin early this month.

The project will be undertaken by an American company — Standard Machines and Equipment of Uniontown, Penn. It will dismantle and sell off the plant's heavy industrial equipment then raze the properties.

The plant site — which employed generations of Quinte area workers since the first cement was produced in the early 1900s — now is snow-covered and desolate of activity.

Operations finally ceased in November as the last workers were let go by the company which has replaced the obsolete Point Anne installation with a highly-automated production unit near Bath.

Mr. Brannen himself is now engaged in last-minute tidying-up chores before locking up the site and leaving to manage a Canada Cement-Lafarge plant in Woodstock.

Authority Receives $9,000 Donation

MARMORA — Work will continue this spring on creating a picturesque bloc of recreation riverfront forest three miles south of here.

The area is Callaghan's Rapids, along the Crowe River in Rawdon and Marmora Township being developed by the Crowe River Conservation Authority.

The project was made possible by a donation from Torontonian John W. Seedsik, who donated $9,000 to the authority for land acquisition. The gift arranged by the Nature Conservancy of Canada, fulfilled the authority's commitment authorizing the provincial government to spend another $27,000 under the province's conservation grants structure.

The 400-acre area is to be developed for hiking, canoeing, cross-country skiing and nature hiking.

Some development already has been carried out since purchase of the land from Ontario Hydro was assured earlier.

L. Hamel Cooke, the authority's secretary-treasurer, says development may be complete in two years.

"It will be developed as fast as we can do it and opened as soon as it's workable," he said. "You can't fix exact dates for conservation projects. But within two years it should be a working proposition."

Hastings County school authorities have also shown interest in the development as an outdoors education resource, said Mr. Cooke.

The authority drains 775 square miles from Paudash Lake in Haliburton County down through Hastings, Peterborough and Northumberland counties to the Trent River near Campbellford.

Rev. Dr. Finley G. Stewart

Meaningful Life Most Satisfying

What you are and what do you do? Is the marriage working?

This was the parallel former moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, Dr. Finley G. Stewart, presented to members of the Sales and Ad Club last night—at their monthly meeting at the Oddfellows Hall.

"Sometimes a person is not doing the things he wants to do. He is doing things that are expedient. He is just doing a job he knows he can do or one that will bring him a good remuneration," said Dr. Stewart, who came to the meeting from Kitchener.

"This is not satisfying to a person. If we are doing what we want to and getting satisfaction from it, then we are doing a good job," he said.

"Sometimes your products are just as hard to sell as yours. You might say I'm in the insurance business too," the speaker, a former minister of the Presbyterian Church in Canada in 1956, told the audience.

"Above all, it is important to be a happy and contented person. This applies to salesmen, teachers, churchmen and everyone," said Dr. Stewart.

"I have a theory," he said. "You can relate the excellence of the persons to the qualities necessary to live in the community.

"These qualities give us satisfaction. What we think and what we believe are related to the things we do.

"Today, in modern society, belief is not important. It is more important to disbelieve things, to be sceptical. That is the 'in thing' today," he said.

"This all produces reckless people in society. But if we have faith in what we want, then we can reach contentment.

"But what can we do today? We read in the papers today of bombings, of violence, of disbonesty. And so we ask ourselves what can we do. We see what is happening today and wonder what we can do about it," said Dr. Stewart.

"What can we do? We hear that mentioned a lot. But there is another answer. Where do I come from? What can really do? This is the development of important things to life.

"There is a difference between existing and living. Existing is letting things happen as they do. Living is saying what I want to do and getting satisfaction from it, then we are doing a good job," he said.

"Above all, we can relate our happiness and contentment to society, in our community. Making this discovery is important in our life.

"We must realize that we do matter ... that we do count. Thinking this has won many victories in the world. We should realize this discovery rather than ask ourselves 'What can we do'," said Dr. Stewart.

"Is it important to decide that we do matter. Important for business and for ourselves. Here is a marriage between yourself and what you are. We must decide that we are living in a meaningful world. We should be ahead of our time and not just operate for today," he said.

Dr. Stewart went on to mention the effect of change in modern society, where it takes courage to change things today. Sometimes it takes a background in the past to change things," he said, referring to a situation in his present community of Kitchener when renovation of the city was underway.

"Our goals should be on the horizon. We have to know what's there and go in that direction. We may not get to the horizon for a while but at least we know what direction we are going," said Dr. Stewart.

"Direction, purpose and motivation are the important things. If they are somehow married to the job, then it is guaranteed that it will work.

"Today we can do things in minutes it once took years to do. This is a most exciting time in history to be living. The marriage is consummated. You can become a better person, a better citizen," said Dr. Stewart.

In closing, Dr. Stewart said: "There aren't any bargains today. We must be 'old fashioned in our convictions, modern in our ideals and ahead of our time in our ideas."

Seniors' Addition Price Rises

Estimated cost of the proposed new addition to the senior citizens' centre on Pinnacle Street has jumped from $120,000 to $165,000.

And the above figure doesn't include architect's fees or the cost of seven parking spaces across the front of the building now owned by the Belleville Parking Authority.

City council learned of the increased cost estimates Monday as it showed concept plans for the new addition.

Council, however, approved the plan concept and also a recommendation from the recreation - access committee that plans go to the parking authority for comment prior to requesting provincial approval.

With provincial approval the addition would be eligible for a 30 per cent grant.

Building addition plans will also be referred to the senior citizens for comment.

Plans call for a two-storey structure 47 by 32 feet to be constructed a few north of the present building. The structure would also have an unfinished basement area with a ground level walkout entrance to the west leading to Front Street.

Check Reveals Stoen Car

An Ottawa parking lot attendant, Glen Robert A. Callbeck, Jr., was yesterday convicted in provincial court here of having a stolen car, valued at more than $200, in his possession.

Callbeck was arrested by the Ontario Provincial Police early in the morning of Jan. 14, after he was stopped for a routine spot check on Highway 401.

When stopped, Callbeck was unable to provide police with suitable identification and a check of his car's registration revealed that it had been stolen in Ottawa on Jan. 10.

The car, a 1973 Chrysler, belonged to a man in Papineauville, Que.

Judge J. E. Clendenning remanded Callbeck in custody for sentencing Jan. 29, pending the preparation of a presentence report.

Council was told that the city parking authority was considering purchase of the present public utilities property which lies between the senior citizens building and Front Street.

One of the features of the planned addition will be a forecourt across the front of the entire structure which would add to the esthetics and provide an outdoor landscaped area.

Cost of the new addition is estimated at $131,000 but with site preparation, renovations to the existing structure, forecourt costs and contingency figure, the total is given as $153,200.

City Manager Albert Elliott said with additional costs he could see a final figure of about $165,000.

Increased costs for materials and labor were given by the architect as the main reason for the estimated cost escalation.

While the proposed forecourt would take up seven parking spaces, it was noted by Alderman Paul Russell that another five staff parking spaces would also be utilized, bringing the total to 12 spaces lost.

Alderman Ben Corke said parking spaces had a value of $2,500 each.

Bills Stolen

Belleville police are investigating another break-in to the East Hill area of the city.

Police Chief Douglas Crosbie said today that his department was informed of the break, enter and theft at 87 Goldale Road late last night.

Apparently, thieves forced their way into the home by breaking a basement window. They stole 16 centennial dollar bills, without serial numbers and 21 American $1 bills.

Police ask any merchant who may, in the next few days, receive a centennial dollar bill without a serial number to contact them immediately.

Cross-country Skiing Is Taking Off

Doing what they're doing they hardly make a sound.

But they're causing a boom.

Cross-country skiing—a family sport watching the evolution of its practice with that of the heated senior outdoors that inspired it—has hit the Belleville area with all the impact of a snowstorm.

Its popularity has been slowly gathering momentum as snowmobile clubs to click in the area in recent winters.

"This year it's really exploded," says a local dealer with one of the city's leading ski equipment suppliers.

And, says a city chain store supplier, the peak isn't yet. Next winter will "really get the sport take off."

Nonetheless enthusiasm right now is gliding so high one community organization is helping organize a club for cross-country skiers.

Tomorrow (Wednesday) at 7.30 p.m., there'll be a meeting at the Y for all skiers sufficiently enthusiastic about forming their own club.

The Y's role is that of initiator — not organizer — and as such is bowing to recurring demand from Bellevillians in recent weeks for such a group.

Says Brian Bentley, Y physical director:

Aim of such an organization would be as a social and instructional — planning group family ski safaris and snowmobile clubs to click on the area in recent winters.

"We've had a lot of requests about that," he says, with one of the city's leading ski equipment suppliers.

"We've over 100 names in now," adds the Y official.

Evolved in northern Europe, the cross-country ski is a newer, more timber, more effortless aid to walking the wintersound countryside than the snowshoe and the Indian.

It's been current in Quebec for some time. There are various reasons for the sport's popularity apart over more dramatic downhill skiing — particularly in the Quinte area, sports professionals and equipment retailers agree.

For one thing, its cheaper: Contrasting costs quoted by Belleville stores put complete cross-country outfits anywhere from $50 to about $100. Downhill outfitting in similar ranges can go up to $200.

"You might say it's roughly about a two-to-one dollar cost ratio as a fair comparison," said one retailer.

Economically, the pastime thus has a runaway edge as a popular family pursuit over the more glamorous, dashing slopes sports.

Local popularity also is influenced by the sparseness of facilities for downhill sport within the immediate Belleville-area terrain permits. There's also the weather uncertainties of the region's winters. Cross-country skiers don't have to be as safely fastidious about ground conditions.

Sliding along the landscapes is slower, safer, for an outing that can include the youngsters — although six years was quoted by one source as the minimum starting year, since certain stamina is required.

But involvement reaches far into age groups. "It's surprising the number of elderly people who are participating," says Betty Ann Bentley's Ski Den in downtown Belleville. "There's a lot of interest in that age group."

Enthusiasm for the sport is hasn't detracted from participation in downhill skiing, she feels.

John Vice, his manager down in the big chain's sports section, meantime describes the growth in cross-country skiing in the area as "unbelievable."

Despite a stepped-up inventory this winter, variety of demand has been greater than anticipated and some ordered to have the Woods-Gordon Survey made of the potential needs of the area.

"But no one would have dared suggest that we have one Board for all three. And yet their hospitals are close together," he said.

Alarm Box

Belleville firefighters responded to the following call for assistance during the 24-hour period ending at 8 a.m. Wednesday:

Tuesday, Jan. 22, flooded furnace, 435 Station Street, no damage, 8:55 a.m.

Council Passes Sprinkler Bylaw

City council Monday gave third reading to its new sprinkler bylaw which requires that new residential structures over a certain height have a sprinkler system for fire protection.

The bylaw is believed to be the first of its type in the province.

Certain detail requirements of the new bylaw are still to be worked out, but City Manager Albert Elliott urged third reading so that the "basics" of the bylaw would be effective.

A possible amendment to the bylaw will be a requirement for a sprinkler system in new townhouse construction which now does not have firewall protection in attic space.

Builders Want Land Banking

The Quinte Home Builders' Association feels the city should get into the land banking business.

Monday city council heard a letter from the organization noting that its executive had discussed land development and the availability of building lots within the city limits.

As a result, the association suggested the city make application to the Federal government regarding the possibility of obtaining federal funds allocated for land banking and development.

Late last year Ron Basford, federal minister of state for urban affairs, said the government would contribute 90 per cent toward municipal land banking schemes but that the provincial government would have to approve the policy through legislation.

Mayor Robin Jeffrey said she realized there were pros and cons about municipal land banking but intimated council may consider the matter.

"We should have a serious look," she said.

Hospital Mergers In Future?

Competition among hospitals in a small area must be overcome because the provincial government cannot afford to duplicate special services, Monsignor James Sullivan said Tuesday.

Msgr. Sullivan, who ends five years as chairman of the Belleville General Hospital Board of Governors Friday, was speaking to the annual meeting of the hospital women's auxiliary.

He told the women "local" interests lead to competition. "To overcome this "maybe it will require a change of attitude on our part."

"In a few instances now, where hospitals are close together, boards of governors have been amalgamated," he said, but added "This is a step toward the required cooperation, but it is a further erosion of the local autonomy we like so much."

Msgr. Sullivan said Bellville hospital has had a "loose relationship" with Trenton and Picton hospitals.

"The success of these present (at - meeting) were naturally their own hospitals," he said.

"However, we became aware of one another's problems and agreed to have the Woods-Gordon Survey made of the hospital needs of the area.

"But no one would have dared suggest that we have one Board for all three. And yet their hospitals are close together," he said.

Gilbert Closes Door on the Blues

By NEIL CAMPBELL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

A two-game rest was just what Boston Bruin goaltender Gilles Gilbert needed.

Gilbert, sidelined for two games by a sore shoulder, turned in a flawless game Tuesday night as the Bruins edged St. Louis Blues 1-0 in a National Hockey League game.

Gilbert, who turned aside 34 shots, was at his best in the first period when he kicked out 17 shots and survived a five-minute major penalty handed to defenceman Carol Vadnais, who cut St. Louis centre Lou Angotti on the forehead with a high stick.

It was the second shutout of the season for Gilbert, the East Division all-star goalie.

His fine performance made a first-period goal by Don Marcotte stand up for the win. Marcotte poked a rebound past Wayne Rutledge, who had 31 saves.

In Tuesday's other NHL games, Philadelphia Flyers edged Vancouver Canucks 3-2 and New York Islanders nudged California Golden Seals 4-3.

Flyers 3 Canucks 2

Fine goaltending by Eddie Dyck kept the Flyers off the scoresheet until Dick MacLeish scored at 19:41 of the second period. Philadelphia scored twice more before Vancouver could score late in the game.

After the game, the troubled Canucks, mired in the East Division cellar, lost the services of assistant-general manager Bud Poile.

Poile quit after acting president Coley Hall said earlier in the day that Poile and general manager Hal Laycoe must be fired.

Islanders 4 Seals 3

Bobby Nystrom scored what turned out to be the winning goal in the third period on a scramble in front of the net to give New York a 4-3 lead.

Andre St. Laurent's long shot from the blue line had given the Islanders a 3-3 lead in the second period.

"I'm sure (California goalie Gillies) Meloche didn't even see the puck," said coach Al Arbour. "But I'll take them like that as long as we win."

Canadiens Start Slow

Montreal Canadiens started twice-a-day workouts in an effort, said coach Scotty Bowman, to get back into shape.

The slumping Canadiens, who now trail the Bruins by eight points in the NHL East, play Toronto Maple Leafs tonight.

The rest of tonight's schedule has Atlanta Flames at New York Rangers, the Seals at Detroit Red Wings, the Blues at Pittsburgh Penguins and Minnesota North Stars at Los Angeles Kings.

Braves Blitz Barons

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Boston Braves, once the scourge of the Eastern Division of the American Hockey League, showed some of their old fire Tuesday night.

The Braves, now in fifth place in the North, blitzed Jacksonville Barons for three goals in the last four minutes of the game to earn a 4-2 victory over the Southern Division's fourth-place club.

Bill Corkery, Steve Sterling and Ron Anderson participated in the rally. Bob Gryp had Boston's first goal. Ed Hoekstra and Dick Sarazzin found the target for Jacksonville.

In the only other game, Richmond Robins, last in the South, downed Springfield Kings, last in the North, 6-3.

Serge Lajeunesse and Chico Droiet each scored twice for the winners with single goals going to Danny Schock and Adam MacAdam. Schock also earned three assists.

Doug Volmar and Vic Venasky countered for the Kings.

Lacroix Shows Them How

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Andre Lacroix of New Jersey Knights gave Edmonton fans a demonstration Tuesday night of how he captured last year's World Hockey Association scoring title.

Lacroix scored two goals himself and set up by three more by linemate Gene Peacosh as the Knights upset the Oilers 6-2.

The win was the first for the Knights in five games against the Oilers and their first ever in Edmonton.

Tuesday's points moved Lacroix into sixth place in the WHA scoring race with 19 goals and 37 assists.

He finished last season with 50 goals and 74 assists for Philadelphia Blazers, who moved to Vancouver this year.

In the off-season, the Blazers swapped him to New York Golden Blades. Lacroix, who moved to Cherry Hill, N.J., when the Blades became the Knights, started slowly with his new club.

The loss for Edmonton, only defenceman Jim Dorey and Ted Green and put the tying goal past Al Smith.

Later in the period, Larry Mavety got Chicago's go-ahead goal as he converted a centring pass by Duke Harris and Jan Popiel added an insurance marker with less than two minutes to play.

Tonight, Cleveland Crusaders play the Blazers in Vancouver and the Knights visit Minnesota Fighting Saints.

Cincinnati isn't expected to be a WHA team until 1976, but one player already under contract could play in the Ohio city next season.

Bill DeWitt, vice-president of the Cincinnati club, said junior prospect Dennis Sobchuk might play for the city's entry in the American Hockey League next year.

Sobchuk, who was signed by the WHA team to a 10-year $1 million contract, is playing out his junior career this season with Regina of the Western Canada League.

Cougars 5 Whalers 1

The Cougars were trailing 3-2 early in the third period when veteran Ralph Backstrom beat their seventh in 23 home games, kept them from moving into sole possession of second place in the WHA West Division.

The Oilers and Jets fell four points behind first-place Houston Aeros, who downed Los Angeles Sharks 3-1. Chicago Cougars downed New England Whalers 5-3 in Tuesday's other game.

Aeros 3 Sharks 1

Although the Aeros won, Houston coach Bill Dineen says the Sharks didn't look like a last-place club to him.

"The Sharks are playing well," he said. "And we haven't played well the last two games."

Rollins Peewees Lose Playoff

Belleville Rollins peewee majors gave it a big effort but found themselves on the outside looking in after last night's Ontario Minor Hockey Association Triple A playoff action at Memorial Arena.

Outscoring the home side 5-3 in the third period, Oshawa chalked up a 6-4 win to take the best of five series 3-1.

The teams managed only three goals in the first two periods with Rollins holding the edge 2-1. But in the final 20 minutes, the shooters found the range.

Team captain Trent Mood paced Oshawa with three goals, including the winner. Checking in with singles were Brent Richard, Rick Wodnisky and Greg Rodka.

Rick Cartwright was a two-goal man for Rollins. Clarence Broekema and Shawn Mulraney were the other Belleville marksmen. Brad Miller, Steve Mofina, and Broekema each drew an assist.

The teams concentrated on hockey with only five minor penalties handed out. Rollins drew three of the penalties.

Oshawa will meet the winner of a similar series now under way between Kingston and Peterborough.

Nicholson Chalks Up Two Wins

Nicholson Catholic College (NCC) recorded two wins in three tries in Bay of Quinte high school basketball play Tuesday.

Trenton High School (THS) supplied the opposition and after taking Nicholson seniors by a 57-39 score, the Trenton lassies ran into trouble.

Nicholson took the junior contest 53-45 and chalked up a 61-28 victory in the intermediate division.

Steve Mitts led THS to the senior win, accounting for 18 of his team's points. Steve Galloway was next in line with 10. Chris Kalnay was NCC's top producer, hitting for 18 points. Bruce Bird supplied 11.

Steve Dolan was NCC's top hand in the midget game. He hooped 24 points while Paul McAlpine checked in with 12.

In other basketball action, Moira senior Trojans defeated Ontario School for the Deaf (OSD) 60-36.

Roland, Walton led the winners with 15 points and Mike Meagher had 12.

OSD was led by Ron Richer's 11 points. Paul Landry and Don Beany each had nine points for the losers.

Everyone Wants to Get Into the Act

There is no shortage of players in the vicinity of the Oshawa goal as Belleville Rollins peewee majors press for a counter during last night's Ontario Minor Hockey Association Triple A playoff game at Memorial Arena. Seven of the game's 10 goals were scored in the third period as Oshawa put the game 6-4 and the series 3-1.

Doctors Move Up

The Doctors moved back to within two points of first place Mead Johnson in the Gas House Hockey League last night as they bombed Rosebush Paints 11-1. The win gave the Doctors 26 points, two behind idle Meads.

In other games, Golden Mile stayed in the thick of the pennant race, edging Fraser and O'Neil Real Estate 3 - 2, while Chuckwagon Foods picked up their second win of the season, downing Stanley Steamers 5 - 1.

Hyalle Bryant fired four goals and added one assist as the Doctors rolled over Rosebush. George Jacklin added three goals and two assists, with league leading scorer, Gary Goyer potting two goals and five assists, and Bill Minaker adding two goals and an assist.

Other markers went to John Chambers, Frank Gillins, Paul Knutson, and Ken Bertrand.

Rosebush's Bob Anderson was the only marksman to break Doctors' goaltender Ron Green's lid for a shutout. Green picked up an assist during the course of the game.

Wayne Andrews and Bill Lynch replied for the fifth place Realtors.

Jack Zylstra and Warren Ruthire each scored once as Chuckwagon topped the Structures crew. Pete Enright was the only goal scorer for Stanley, who suffered their eighth loss of the season.

Stirling Nips Belleville 3-2

Stirling squeezed past Belleville 3-2 in junior girls' hockey action on the weekend.

In the game played at Dick Ellis Rink, the Stirling youngsters got a two-goal effort from Suzanne Jaclet on the way to the win. Sherry Farrell accounted for the other goal for the visitors.

Scoring for Belleville were Jane Acton and Lorraine Hosack. Vickie Mitchell and Lori Guthrie each earned an assist for the losers.

RACES CANCELLED

PARIS (Reuter) — About 700 motor races are to be cancelled in France this year to reduce gasoline consumption, the French Motor Racing Association announced Tuesday. However, the Le Mans 24-hour race and the French Grand Prix will go ahead as planned, the association added.

Minor Hockey Week Observed Every Week

"As far as Belleville is concerned, Minor Hockey Week is celebrated not just for one week in January but for about 30 weeks throughout the winter season," states Belleville Minor Hockey Association (BMHA) president Blake Moynes.

He explains, "It is for this reason we don't plan any special activities for the week."

Minor hockey groups all over the country are marking their "special week" from January 19-26.

The minor hockey program is certainly not lagging in Belleville. The number of boys registered in the BMHA has reached 1,586 for the 1973-74 season. There are 1,350 players registered with house league teams and the remainder take part in the sport at the all-star level, representing the BMHA in Ontario Minor Hockey Association OMHA leagues.

There are 68 house league teams operating in groups from novice (seven and eight year olds) to juvenile (17-19).

The local association has 12 novice teams, 20 atom squads, 22 peewee, 18 bantam, 10 midget and six juvenile teams. There are 10 teams taking part in the OMHA groupings, from minor atom to the juvenile level.

Moynes estimates it takes about 175 volunteers to keep the house league operating each week. That figure includes coaches, referees, convenors, timekeepers and others.

Of course, the importance of the sponsors who support one or more teams in the various groupings, is not overlooked, especially during Minor Hockey Week. The generosity of local businessmen helps keep the program operating.

While there is no "special tournament" in Belleville to mark the occasion, Minor Hockey Week gives men like Blake Moynes the opportunity to say "thank you" to the volunteers and sponsors who help make the BMHA go.

Mahovlich Among Eight Additions

MONTREAL (CP) — A player who has scored more goals and has more points in all-star competition than the entire West Division all-star team Tuesday was among additional players selected for the 37th National Hockey League all-star game in Chicago, Jan. 29.

Scotty Bowman of Montreal Canadiens, who will coach the East Division, added among his eight extra players veteran left winger Frank Mahovlich from his own club.

Mahovlich has the second highest point total in all-star history wit 12, including seven on goals, in 14 games. The 20-man West Division team has scored a total 11 points, including three goals, in previous all-star games.

Billy Reay of Chicago Black Hawks selected three members of his own club among his eight additions for the West Division team. And the three Black Hawks are the ones who have scored goals in previous all-star games—Centre Stan Mikita and Pit Martin, along with right winger Jim Pappin. Reay has designated Martin as a right winger for the game.

The nucleus of each team comprises 13 players selected by members of the Professional Hockey Writers' Association in the 18 NHL cities. It was announced last week.

The only stipulation Reay and Bowman had to follow in selecting additional help was that each team in the respective divisions be represented.

In addition to the three Black Hawks, Reay added defencemen Barclay Plager of St. Louis Blues and Joe Watson of Philadelphia Flyers; centre Garry Unger of St. Louis; and left wingers Jary Pleau of California Golden Seals and Bob Berry of Los Angeles Kings.

In addition to Mahovlich, Bowman's other seven choices were: defencemen Dallas Smith of Boston Bruins and Denis Potvin of New York Islanders; centres Gil Perreault of Buffalo Sabres and Jacques Lemaire of the Canadiens; left winger Ed Westfall of the Islanders; and right wingers Bobby Schmautz of Vancouver Canucks and Mickey Redmond of Detroit Red Wings.

Cambridge Rink in Final

SARNIA, Ont. (CP) — Kate Service' Cambridge rink advanced Tuesday to the Ontario Ladies' Curling Association finals in the second day of play.

Mrs. Service scored five rocks on the last end to defeat Sue Merry of the Toronto Cricket Skating Club 9-8 in the A Division final.

Her East Curling Club rink emerged as the only undefeated rink in the field of 16.

Mrs. Merry's rink, with its first loss, moves into the B Division final today. Mrs. Dickson defeated Lois Lang of Hanover 10-5 and Nini Mutch of Toronto Humber Highland 9-8 while the Mutch rink won 9-8 over Anne Acton's Belleville rink.

Rinks losing a first-round match in the double-knockout event move into B Division where losing in subsequent rounds drop into the C Division.

The winners in each division advance to the Ontario finals in Hamilton in February.

Service rink opened Tuesday morning with a 10-1 win over Liz Ball of St. Catharines while the Merry rink defeated Thea Lange of Toronto Tam Heather 7-4.

Mrs. Parker defeated Mary Smith's Dundas rink 9-4 and the Windsor rink of Alice Bell 9-5.

Helen Dickson of Norwich and Mrs. Lange's Tam Heather rink will compete in the C Division final today.

Reminiscences And a Fund

The death of Harvey McFarland caused many sports fans to reminisce.

One who remembers the glory days of the Belleville McFarlands and had the memories come flooding back when he heard Mr. McFarland had died, is Ron Dulmage of Sault Ste. Marie.

A former resident of Belleville, Mr.Dulmage writes to let us know that wherever his job takes him, mention of his home town more often than not draws the response: "Wasn't that the home of the McFarlands?"

Commenting on Mr. McFarland's "energetic involvement in sports in the Quinte area", Mr. Dulmage writes:

"Who will ever forget the sound of "More Mac's More" when teams such as the Whitby Dunlops or Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen came to town?

"How many remember listening to the early morning broadcasts from Kelowna, B.C. as the Macs came from behind to win the Allan Cup in 1958?

"And who will forget, just one year later, sitting nervously next to the radio as the Macs defeated Russia 3-1 and went on to win the championship at Prague?

"They were exciting years and the welcome home parades were something else."

Mr. Dulmage goes on to recall that in the 1960-61 season, he was a goaltender with Belleville McFarlands Junior B team and "received further benefit from Mr. McFarland's interest in hockey."

"Never could a group of teenagers receive more generous treatment."

Certainly, the name McFarland will come up whenever "hot stovers" get together to discuss the old days.

And Mr. Dulmage will be pleased to know that the former Mayor of Picton retained his interest in sports. He was quick to come up with a donation for the Wellington Arena Fund, shortly before his untimely death.

The fund gets another boost Friday, February 1 when the Trent Valley Intermediate D Hockey League holds an all-star game. And, fittingly, the game will be played at Picton Arena.

Tweed BP Oil Kings will supply the opposition for the all-stars in the 8:30 p.m. game. The Tweed club is the defending league and provincial champion.

Manager of the all-star aggregation is Garry Lavender of Wellington. He's looking for a sell-out crowd to help swell the arena fund.

Players from Tamworth, Brighton, Campbellford, Havelock and Wellington make up the all-star roster.

Heading the list is former Belleville and Kingston Senior A star Doug Senior, a member of the Wellington squad. Other Wellington stalwarts on the club are Tom and Bob Lavender, along with goalie Arnie Istead.

Havelock is represented by defencemen Rob McCarthy and Wayne Wannamaker. Campbellford will send forwards Ed Stapley, Dale Loucks and Craig Bennett, and defencemen Dave Gillet and Jim Rowe.

Remember former junior goalie Bill Cormier? He's one of three players to make the squad from the Brighton team. The others are Bill Haywood and Len Tait. From Tamworth come defencemen Gary Hart and Dre Weese, goaltender Raymond Lee and forward Jack Smith.

The Tweed lineup is dotted with former Belleville Junior B players. Bill McGuire is playing coach. Others who saw action in Belleville during their junior days are Grant Hagerman, Doug Folis, Glen Hagerman, Roger Smith, Ron O'Coin Doug Perry and Rick Holmes.

Goaltenders are Larry Charlton and Dick Beare. Rounding out the Tweed lineup are Robert Bancroft, Brian Brooks, Tom St. Jules, Louis Rivers, Terry LeSage, Dorion Lessard, Paul Farrell and Terry McGregor.

Manager of the team is Harry Salesnay.

This fund raising project is one which deserves the support of all hockey fans. Keep that date in mind. It's Friday, February 1.

Tickets are available from the players.

In case you can't make it to the game, send your donation to the Bank of Nova Scotia, Wellington.

ELSEWHERE—In the mood for softball? The Ontario Amateur Softball Association annual convention goes April 5,6 and 7 in Oshawa.

Proposed ammendments to the constitution, bylaws, playing rules as well as nominations for executive offices must be filed, in writing, before March 1.

The mailing address is: OASA Secretary, 1075 Eglenside Dr., Windsor, Ont.

Look out Leafs!

If Les Canadiens aren't looking for revenge, Sam Pollock doesn't know a future draft choice from a bowl of pea soup.

Just to jog your memory, the last time Leafs and the Habs met, Red Kelly's Toronto sextet shocked Scotty Bowman and company, 8-2. That was back on December 26 at the Gardens in Toronto.

If Leafs have looked anything but impressive of late, could be they've been saving themselves for tonight's encounter at the Forum.

What a hope!

Well, we'll grasp at that straw.

* * *

During intermission tonight, don't go for a cool brew if you want to have the "thrills" of Showdown in the NYI brought back into focus.

The penalty shot competition returns February 2 and according to publicity releases your memory will be refreshed while the players are resting from their labors between periods of the Leaf-Canadian game.

Bill Riley Wins 2

GRAVENHURST, Ont. (CP) — Norm Kasch's Cornwall rink won 8-6 over Jack Lloyd's foursome from Barrie, Tuesday at the only extra-end game in the first round of the Ontario senior men's curling championship.

In other first-round games, Gib McIlveen of the Annandale Curling Club in Pickering defeated Charlie Semple of the Toronto Cricket, Skating and Curling Club 7-6; Bill Wickens of the Brant club in Brantford won 7-4 over Leo Kehoe of Burlington, and Bill Riley of the Quinte Club in Belleville defeated Dave Cornish of Seaforth 8-6.

In second-round play, the Quinte Curling Club and the Cornwall club each earned another victory.

Quinte defeated Barrie 11-4 and Cornwall defeated the Seaforth rink by the same 11-4 score. Other members of the Belleville rink are Vaughn Storey, Chris Gittsbero and Bill Spinelli.

The Toronto club defeated the Brantford rink 8-4.

Competition, continues with three rounds today and two rounds Thursday.

The winner will advance to the Canadian finals to be held in Saint John, N.B.

BIG BALL COMPULSORY

LONDON (AP) — The American big ball will be compulsory for the British Open golf championships in July. This decision by the Royal and Ancient club was its first official sign of approval for the widely used 1.68 inch ball. At previous British Opens, the choice of ball size was left to the players. But some U.S. players switched reluctantly to the 1.62 inch British ball.

Falconry Returns To Poland

CHELM, Poland (Reuter) — The medieval sport of falconry has returned to Poland after a break of a century and a half.

Forestry expert Czeslaw Sielicki showed how it was done this month when he led out a band of nine huntsmen, all students, in the forests and fields in this quiet corner of the Polish countryside.

They hunt with the formidable goshawk, capable of tearing the head off a pheasant in the paralyzing grip of its strong claws.

Dressed in their hunting gear and with a feather in their hats, they march off to the sound of a bugle call to take up their positions across the snow-covered fields.

Wildlife, from deer to pheasants, spring out of the nearby woods at the approach of beaters. But as rabbits dash for new cover the hawks are on them in a blur of speed and with beating of wings.

Relic tied to the bird's feet in case of loss tinkle gently as they nestle in the gauntleted hand, nibbling at the hunter's cheeks as a mark of affection.

Sielicki became interested in reviving falconry by accident, chancing across an old sporting book.

By trial and error, he learned how to train the goshawk to fly, kill and return to his hand, losing four birds in the process.

It is an art whose secrets were kept hidden under a panoply of pageantry during the heyday of the sport in Poland.

The sport was introduced here by the Tartars about 1,000 years ago, and became so fashionable that no man was considered properly dressed without a falcon on his wrist.

The law imposed a duty on the supply of cows' livers "to feed the falcons, and their tasters rose to become important officials in the court retinue.

The sport disappeared from Poland with the perfection of the sporting rifle about 150 years ago.

Sielicki speaks enthusiastically about the thrills of the sport.

This is not so much in the killing as in watching the bird spot its prey, tighten its muscles and shoot off into a graceful flight before diving on its kill with the speed of lightning.

The goshawk have an excellent reputation for providing for the cooking pot, covered by their kill on their first hunt here—13 rabbits, two hares and 19 pheasants.

The hunters are also hoping their new-found sport will lead to the protection of all predatory birds, many species of which are in danger through haphazard shooting.

contemporaries abound and he seems to write with an irresistable twinkle.

ANYTHING FOR A QUIET LIFE — Jack Hawkins.

From his childhood as a chorister at Wood Green Parish church through a spell as a boy actor with Laurence Olivier in the Thorndike-Casson company in the 1920's, Jack Hawkins rose to fame as one of Britain's best-loved international stars. Then, in 1966, at the height of his career, tragedy struck in the form of cancer of the throat. A life-saving operation deprived him of the great voice which contributed so much to his fame. This compelling biography describes the joys, misfortunes, and hilarious incidents of Mr. Hawkins's life and his inspiring fight to survive and overcome the ravages of a cruel disease.

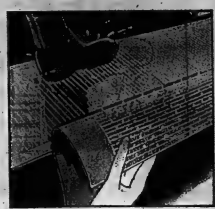
P.S. YOUR NOT LISTENING: A YEAR WITH FIVE DISTURBED CHILDREN — Eleanor Orwig.

How do you teach long division to a child who believes that the lunch box in his lunchbox is alive and trying to escape? What meaning have words for a child too fearful to communicate? During the year in which she taught a special class of acutely disturbed children, Mrs. Craig grappled each bewildering and exhausting day with such problems. This book is the touching account of Mrs. Craig's attempts to reach the five pupils for whom conventional methods of education are meaningless.

ART OF HOMEMAKING — Virginia T. Habeeb.

Homemaking is a sometimes rewarding, often baffling, more often tedious job of keeping a house running. Here, in this book, a famous magazine expert puts it all together for today's homemaker. There are chapters on managing one's time and money, decorating, cleaning the house and entertaining. Many other problems are discussed, such as moving, living with pets, household mechanics and repairs.

KNOWING, TRAINING AND ABLE RETRIEVERS — Kurt Unkelbach.



This book reveals all one really needs to know about the retriever breeds. It is informative and entertaining, based on hard facts and new knowledge. It covers all one needs to know about bringing up dogs, from selecting, understanding and enjoying a pup, to training and using him as a pet, show, field or obedience dog.

KIND AND USUAL PUNISHMENT — Jessica Mitford.

This is the author who wrote an expose of the funeral business. In her new book she probes the cruelties, fraud, etc. that exist in American prisons. Full of shocking revelations, "Kind and Usual Punishment" discloses the dismal conditions of the institutions and the sadistic brutality of many penal employees. There are appalling stories of medical experiments carried out on prisoners and the demoralizing parole system. The author makes many poignant observations on the system.

Even with the best daily care, a carpet can become dull. Professional cleaning is recommended. However, the following method for home carpet care is suggested:

1. Always test your carpet for colour fastness in a hidden area.
2. Vacuum your carpet thoroughly.
3. Into a pail of lukewarm water stir 1 tablespoon of a neutral powdered laundry detergent and 1 teaspoon of vinegar. Shake well.
4. Using a gentle rotary motion, apply the solution sparingly to the carpet pile with a sponge.
5. Rinse the sponge in clean water, squeeze dry and sponge the carpet again to remove as much of the detergent as possible. Blot up any excess moisture with a dry cloth.
6. Dry the carpet as quickly as possible. Fans or heaters will help.
7. Avoid excessive wetting and do not replace furniture until dry.

Kinsmen Will Support Cystic Fibrosis Battle

The Kinsmen Club of Belleville has decided whole-heartedly to throw their support behind the fight against cystic fibrosis.

And just to show they mean business, they agreed last night to donate a lump sum of $5,000 to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation of Canada.

The club was approached at its last meeting two weeks ago at which time Ian McClure, director of the National Foundation of Cystic Fibrosis, sought the group's support.

That support came Monday as members voted overwhelmingly to back the foundation in fighting the killer disease of young children.

But it wasn't just a matter of donating the money and then forgetting about it. As part of their support involves a program of making the public aware of the disease, the Kinsmen is involved in this to make evident in the community as time goes on.

At the Exhibition in May and September, a booth will be set up by the Kinsmen informing the public about the disease.

Said Doug Jackson, president of the Kinsmen Club of Belleville: "We'll continue with our various projects in the community. Our involvement with cystic fibrosis is something extra.

"We'll become involved with cystic fibrosis and remain with it.We hope to set up a booth at the Quinte Mall and we'll have displays at the Quinte Exhibition in the spring and fall," said Mr. Jackson.

Already half of the Kinsmen districts in Ontario support the fight against cystic fibrosis and eventually the Kinsmen Clubs of Canada have a national identity with fighting cystic fibrosis.

It has been estimated that it costs about $3,000 to keep one child with cystic fibrosis alive for a year. The disease strikes one in approximately every 1,000 babies.

For those born with the disease, certain glands do not operate properly. That is the mucous glands secrete an abnormal thick, gluey mucus and the sweat glands produce an unusually salty sweat.

It is the sticky mucous that causes trouble mainly in the lungs by clogging the bronchial tubes, although the digestive system is also affected.

Children afflicted with the disease, which has no known cause, often do not live to adulthood.

Two Groups Ask Grants

City ratepayers are being asked to contribute tax money to help support the Quinte Arts Council and the Central Volunteer Bureau.

Heads of the local cultural organization and the volunteer group appeared at city council Monday with grant requests for $3,000 and $3,700 respectively, which were referred to the city manager for further consideration.

Manfred Koechlin told council that the arts council, formed as a centennial project in 1967, was made up of 21 groups with a total membership.

He said the artistic and cultural programs of the various ship of more than 2,000.

groups had a vast impact on the cultural life of the city and were as important as the sports and recreational programs directed by the recreation committee.

Mrs. Miriam Bishop said her volunteer group which carried on a wide range of activities would cost more than $1,000 a week if workers were paid even the minimum wage.

The bureau received a city grant of $1,500 last year but this year's deficit was expected to reach $3,700 and council was asked to make up the difference.

Speed Swim Course Added

Queen Victoria's community activities for the winter will include a speed swimming course at the Quinte-Kiwanis pool. The course started Jan. 22 and will be held from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. To be eligible, swimmers must be able to swim at least two lengths of the pool. The cost is 30 cents a session and the instructor is Judith Pultz.

The ladies keep-fit class is continuing every Tuesday from 7 to 8:30 p.m. under the direction of Connie Williams and Johanna Hughes. The class is held at the school and includes recreational activities such as table tennis and volleyball.

Gymnastic instruction began Jan. 18 from 5:30 to 8 p.m. at the school. Cost of the 15-week course is $2. Sponsored by the city recreation department and directed by Valerie Geen, the course is for boys and girls aged 7 to 12.

Extended Main Gets Approval

City council Monday placed its stamp of approval on a 1,600 foot extension of six-inch watermain along Canniffon Road in order to service proposed Belleville Yardmen's sport complex.

Alderman Arthur Keegan said all cost of the watermain extension would be paid by the Yardmen. The extension already has OMB approval, he said.

Convention Attendance Debated

Last year's expenditures of $5,000 in city funds to send Belleville representatives to out-of-town conventions and conferences has been termed by Mayor Robin Jeffrey Monday as being "pretty small potatoes."

The comment was made during discussion on whether a traffic committee recommendation to send all committee members to a traffic conference should receive council approval.

Mayor Jeffrey said people in other cities have been accused of taking money for attendance at outside conventions and then never putting in an appearance.

But, she said Belleville council members have never taken needless advantage.

"We've have never spent too much of the taxpayers' money."

Alderman Bon Corke two weeks ago raised the issue of attendance at out-of-town conventions, claiming it was what the city decided who should go to how many conventions, attendance.

This week, however, he said the question had been raised for budgetary reasons not as criticism about conventions.

Alderman Jean Smith said outside convention attendance was money well spent, as it could be of tremendous benefit.

Such attendance should be encouraged, not discouraged.

Alderman Jack Ireland said that although the traffic committee recommendation included "all" committee members, there was no thought that all would attend the same seminar.

Council approved the traffic committee recommendation which Alderman Paul Russell said had been introduced with the idea of setting out budget requirements.

Farm Production Holding Its Own

Despite the fact that the Hastings county dairy farm population has decreased by 50 per cent during the past 10 years, farm production in this county is holding its own.

This is the report of agricultural representative Douglas Tipper who told county council last week that except for milk production which had been lowered because of weather conditions, some items of farm production were increasing.

Although milk production was down because of weather but on an adjusted basis, normal weather would be holding its own.

Mr. Tipper said that the question of farmers going out of business really hadn't changed. They do so for reasons of age, health, labor problems and to capitalize by their assets.

The interesting point, however, was that there has been a slow but steady growth in young people getting into the business of farming.

The agricultural representative said that farming, like other aspects of area life, was constantly changing.

But during 1973 the pace of change had accelerated.

For the first time in the memory of many people there was no surplus food products with the market being pretty much a supply and demand situation.

Many factors had contributed to this but Mr. Tipper said the points which had to be made was that for now and the foreseeable future food will be produced only under an economic and viable situation and this means only one thing — that the consumer will have to pay for it.

"Too many people forget the fact that the farm producer, although recognized as having a higherwate of efficiency than his industrial counterpart, has, in doing so, become more dependent on other outside goods and services over which he has no control. In effect, he buys fuel, machinery household items and many other things in the same competitive marketplace in which most other members of the society turns."

What this means is that while farm prices have moved up in recent years, the farmers' input has done the same thing or even moved more quickly.

Mr. Tipper reviewed the work of his department's office in Stirling, noting the increase in farm visits, attendance at farm meetings and general office activities.

"... the demand for service continues to grow and likely will continue as more changes occur in the other aspects of area life, society."

Mr. Tipper also reviewed 1973 activities of county 4-H homemaking clubs, 4-H agricultural clubs and special services departments.

Old Wounds Opened

GENOA, Italy (Reuter) — A 69-year-old man who died out of form to obtain a pension at Sampierdarena near here has been told by police he may face imprisonment on charges of deserting from the Italian army in 1943.

Stickers Self-Destruct

TORONTO (CP) — Anyone thinking of stealing 1974 Ontario licence plate stickers can forget it. The new vinyl stickers self-destruct if they are removed from plates. They're designed so they can't be transferred from one plate to another," a transport ministry spokesman said. "If anyone tried to remove the sticker from the plate, the sticker would come off in little pieces."

Leopard On the Loose

BOLOGNA, Italy (AP) — Customers at a bar here might have expected pink elephants, but not a leopard that escaped from a circus and charged into the establishment. The bar was quickly emptied and the cat finally lured into a healthy bath cage.

To Your Good Health

Hearts Often Have Split Sound

By G.C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: A recent physical checkup revealed that my heart has a "split first sound." I am 68 and very active in volunteer community projects. Please explain what it means and if it is serious.—M.K.

When a doctor listens to your heart with a stethoscope, he hears the vibrations from the closing of two of the heart valves.

If the two valves are perfectly synchronized, this comes as a single sound. But if there is a slight delay in the closing of one valve, there are two sounds, or a "split" sound.

This occurs, not uncommonly, in normal hearts, and is of no significance unless there is a pronounced degree of "splitting."

In view of your active life, and apparently without any contrary findings on your physician. I would have to assume that your "split sound" is probably one that occurs in healthy hearts and is no cause for alarm.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: You wrote that cracking knuckles wouldn't make them bigger. My Mom didn't see it and she doesn't believe it. Could you print it again?—M.E.

That's right. Some folks can crack their knuckles and some can't. It depends on the looseness of the joint capsules. But the cracking does not harm the joints or make them larger.

As I recall it, I did warn knuckle-crackers that the sound could be annoying to other people, so remember that, too.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am 56 and my periods stopped a year ago. Last month I got my period again. Is it possible for me to get pregnant at my age? Do I still have to use some kind of contraceptive?—R.B.

Yes, you could become pregnant. Yes, you still have to use contraception.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Does the fact that a man has had a vasectomy cause his hair and arms to grow longer and coarser? I've noticed this in my many cases the hair and arms swell, retaining the fluid that would have been taken care of by the glands that were cut out.

In my case, my hand and arm are getting larger and larger. Is there nothing that can be done to prevent them growing still larger?—Mrs. F.M.L.

Goodness, yes. Let's not scare a lot of women away from having such important operations as a necessary mandatory procedure.

An elastic sleeve is important, but other physical therapy is also necessary.

This involves exercises and other procedures. You can obtain such information at any rehabilitation institute in your area or from a physician specializing in this type of therapy.

"Back to Recovery," program of the American Cancer Society also deals with this problem. I suggest you contact the local cancer society office for more information.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Regarding loss of taste, I read about it after having had that trouble two years. I took a clipping to my doctor, and he had me try taking zinc for 30 days. The last few days I noticed a distinct improvement.

The zinc is an iritant, and must be taken with a meal, not before, or it will cause slight nausea and unpleasantness.

I made the mistake of beginning off on the zinc after several months and drifted back into the no taste, no smell condition. I feel more trouble when resuming it, but read a recent report on taking glutamic acid hydrochloride which permits the zinc to be absorbed.

Since taking that before a meal, and a new non-prescription which the doctor recommended, a multiple vitamin-mineral preparation containing a small amount of zinc, I have had great results.—Mrs. G.E.

Steep Assignment

TORONTO (CP) — A reporter found an exerting way to approach the famed mountain climber Sir Edmund Hillary for an interview. The reporter, Ben Wicks of Toronto Sun, donned climbing gear and, using ropes, clambered up the side of the hotel where Sir Edmund was staying. Sir Edmund was the first man to climb Mount Everest.

Argentines Look for Help In Drinking Country's Wine

MENDOZA, Argentina (AP) — Argentines make 530 million gallons of wine a year. Now, for the first time, they're looking for answers to help them drink it.

Only France and Italy, and sometimes Spain and Russia, produce more wine than Argentina. But here the population of 25 million drinks all but one per cent of the output.

Only the French and the Italians guzzle more wine than the Argentines, and Marseilles dockworkers are teetotalers compared to many red-nosed cane cutters in the Argentine north.

Rising prices have cut consumption, though, and the country's wineries (Bodegas) are wondering what to do with the mountain of grapes expected from an exceptional harvest this year.

"If we don't export, we'll have to throw away grapes," muttered one wine merchant in this region of vineyards in the shadow of the Andes.

"Nonsense," says the manager of a huge winery. "Grape people are always complaining. But it's true we will have to find a solution."

If the weather holds, Argentina may have an extra two million tons of grapes hanging around, messing up the market.

Argentine wines are excellent, they affirmed, but no one has bothered to share that secret with the world. Only Neighboring Chile, only the 19th producer in the world, exports six times more.

"The main thing they decided was they must think of themselves as more than just winemakers," said one winegrower who attended the Mendoza meeting. "After all, grapes have other uses, too."

Growers are studying ways of using grape sugar to stay the mammoth Argentine sweet tooth and are pushing the table grape market.

Immigrants flooded Argentina in the late 1800s and early 1900s, mainly from Italy and Spain. Some brought grape cuttings, and many others brought a deep-seated love for the fruit of the vine.

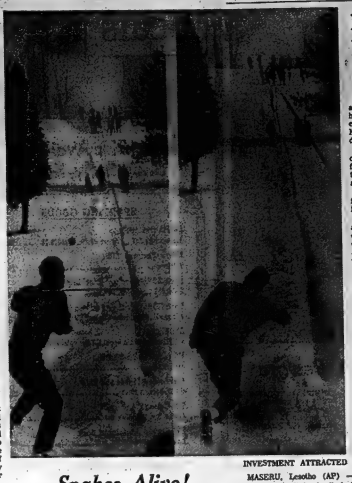
Today bodegas, run by second-and third-generation Europeans, produce every form of wine from bood-dissolving mountain red to fine champagne and excellent cognacs.

Argentina's grapes, all 5.5 billion pounds of them, are produced by mud-made Irrigation on otherwise scrubby desert. The three types of wines turn out one of the highest yields per acre in the world. The country's finer wines have been lauded in world competition and are savored by connoisseurs. Familiar French names appear on some labels from bodegas run by technicians sent from the old country.

But the wines here range near 14 per cent alcohol, stronger than many people abroad prefer. And some importers say the quality is not constant.

In 1970 Argentines each drank 92 quarts, on an average. Now they drink only 70 quarts, but that's hardly abstinence.

"Ordinary wine" is officially held to 60 cents a quart, expensive to a $3-a-day worker, but still a necessary staple. Better wine might be as much as a dollar, and fine champagne costs $7—tax included.



Parents feed wine cut with water to pre-school children. In Buenos Aires, diners habitually slop soda water into their tinto, a practice which Mendoza residents regard with distaste.

"Anyway, who knows what junk is already in the water when it is finally distributed in Buenos Aires," snifted one Mendoza vine man, giving the favorite argument for the old dream here of bottling the wine at its point of origin.

The best wines are generally bottled on the spot, sealed with Canary Island corks and marked with rich-looking labels. Some are aged 15 years and are sent off to market with first-class accommodation.

So far, there have always been Argentines ready to dispose of every bottle available. Neighboring countries have bought up the slight surplus, and some was sent to the United States and Europe.

This year—and next year and the year after—the balance may change drastically. And soon the wine snobs of the world may have to learn a few hundred new names.

Farm Most Dangerous Factory

REGINA (CP) — Domestic arguments might be avoided if husband and wife massaged each other's feet, says Violet Kaminski, one of 12 reflexologists in Regina.

Mrs. Kaminski works in an orthopedic shoe store and before she shows a cranky customer a pair of shoes she massages a foot.

"In five minutes you have the greatest person you can imagine."

Reflexology, Mrs. Kaminski said in an interview, is a second-cousin to acupuncture and came to North America via Asia. While acupuncture deadened nerve endings, reflexology stimulated them and charted the feet according to nerve endings they shared with other parts of the body.

Nerve endings were the key and Mrs. Kaminski said graininess on a left little toe might mean arthritis on the left shoulder and arm.

Pains in certain parts of the foot were signals of ailments of the thyroid, kidney, bladder, ovaries or other internal organs or glands.

Feet are the body's foundation, she said, and if they are treated properly, backache and muscular fatigue in the rest of the body can be prevented.

Feet should not be put in vinyl boots because, unlike leather, vinyl doesn't breathe which means feet sweat and get wet and their owners get colds.

Mrs. Kaminski said people should not wander about all day in basic sneakers but should wear shoes with support arches were needed.

U.S. ARABS DONATE

DAMASCUS (AP) — Arab emigrants to the United States contributed more than $1 million worth of medical supplies and other aid to the Syrian Red Crescent Society in the first two months after the October Arab-Israeli war, Red Crescent president Dr. Shoukat Ghattf announced. The Red Crescent is the Moslem equivalent of the Red Cross.

Author Looks at Economy

Canadians: Incompetent Yankees: Untrustworthy

By JOHN DODD
Canadian Press Staff Writer

A disturbing book takes a pessimistic look at economic development in Canada.

Canadian leaders and industrialists are described as incompetent, almost without exception. United States leaders of multinational companies are competent but can't be trusted.

Time after time, the book says, U.S. interests and the energy companies have outwitted the Canadians.

The result has been that Canadians have sold the country's resources of oil, gas, water and electrical power to the U.S. for paltry sums. With the resources went Canada's capacity for economic self-determination, job creation, social preservation and environmental protection.

The book, Philip Sykes' book, Sellout, The Giveaway of Canada's Energy Resources.

For example, the power of the Columbia River in British Columbia was sold to the U.S. in 1960 for payments and benefits totalling about $400 million.

But Mr. Sykes says the water has a consumptive value estimated at $30 per acre foot. The vast flow then is worth $4.5 billion.

In addition, Canada lost control of the Columbia and Kootenay rivers and millions of dollars in power potential, had good land flooded and was stuck with the cost of providing permanent flood control for the state of Washington.

Other giveaways occurred in Alberta.

"The best, most accessible gas in the country was sold cheaply to the U.S. and the possibility of an industrialized Alberta was sold with it."

There was a similar "fire sale" of Alberta's crude oil. It was produced by a cartel of international companies and sold to related companies at prices determined by the cartel.

Now, Mr. Sykes says, Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta wants Canadians to bail him out by paying higher prices.

Resources are still being wasted, the book says.

Quebec pushed ahead with its James Bay project even though the environmental consequences were unknown and the native residents of the area were not consulted.

Eventual power from the hydroelectric project was expected to cost at least three times that from nuclear plants already in operation.

Manitoba plans what Mr. Sykes describes as "a sellout, primarily engineered, promoted and realized by Canadians themselves."

The diversion of the Churchill River into the Nelson River to foster hydroelectric generation represented an indirect energy sellout because it would damage a water system for a century and produce a short-term benefit perhaps only four years. It was planned, at least in part, to service U.S. industry.

In another sellout threat, a group of companies dominated by Americans sought to build a gas pipeline from the Arctic to the U.S. border.

The multinational companies had already taken over effective control of resources in the Arctic.

"To complete the closing of the pincer around the frontier, the cartel needs only the approval of the national energy board and the Canadian cabinet for the delivery vehicle that will plug into the United States industrial system forever."

Mr. Sykes, former managing editor of Maclean's and the Toronto Star and now editor of The Sunday Sun in Toronto, has produced a readable history of energy dealings.

The reader, however, has to take Mr. Sykes' account of happenings that lead to his conclusions on faith. The bibliography shows considerable research but most of the assumptions in the book are unsupported.

The book is already outdated.

The Alberta government has taken over control of oil and natural gas along lines which Mr. Sykes might find acceptable in part and Arab oil producers may have changed the economics of some energy ventures by doubling the price of their crude oil.

But the basic premise of the book is far from outdated:

"The world-wide energy corporations . . . already control an awesome slice of Canada's economic life. It is time to curb their expansion. If they are not stopped now, they could take the jackpot."

Sellout, The Giveaway of Canada's Energy Resources, by Philip Sykes; Hurtig Publishers; $8.95 hardcover, $2.95 paperback; 235 pages.

Snakes Alive!

The first North American Snow Snake competition will be held at the Woodland Indian Cultural Educational Centre in Brantford Feb. 2-3. The seldom-seen Indian winter sport involves throwing slender rods of polished hardwood along a grooved track in the snow. Some of the seven-foot-long snow snakes have been known to travel more than a mile. The organizers of the event hope to make it an annual affair. (CP Photo)

Poachers Beware

Nova Scotia Poachers Have to Outwit Dogs

HALIFAX (CP) — Tracking an arsonist or catching a wily poacher is a major job for the Nova Scotia department of lands and forests, or rather it's a job for Major—and his buddies, of course.

Major is a purebred German shepherd who has proved it's a dog's job when it comes to tracking down violators of Nova Scotia's game laws.

Major has been on the job since 1966 when the department decided that dogs might help reduce the incidence of fires deliberately set in the province's forests.

From that beginning, the department's accepted three other dogs which are used extensively in tracking down suspected violators of the game laws and occasionally to help locate missing persons.

Major and his master, provincial forest ranger Robert Matheson, live in Middle Stewiacke in Colchester County in the central part of the province, where the department recently heard complaints of deer jacking, or poaching.

Ranger Matheson and Major ended their investigation early one morning when they stopped a car that had been behaving suspiciously. Although no incriminating evidence was found in the vehicle, Major searched the nearby woods until he located a rifle, a light and some shells.

The department was able to prove the items had been thrown from the car in the brief chase and the three occupants were convicted and fined $700.

The other members of the ranger-dog teams are Dave Thomas and Lucky, who work out of Grafton, in the western sector of the province; Murray Workman and Smoken, who are based in Antigonish, and Ed Townsend, who works with Dan in Cape Breton.

"Dan is only a year old and only started tracking a few weeks ago," said Gerry Davis, Major's first dogmaster but now supervisor of forest protection at fire control headquarters in Shubenacadie.

"He has already had his first successful case involving illegal hunting activities."

The dogs are obtained throughout the province but must be suitable to their work. They are not easy to find because an efficient tracking dog must come from a dam and sire with good temperaments.

"You run into problems with females when they are in heat," Davis said. "A male is more outgoing and braver and always ready to go providing he is healthy."

Other breeds make good tracking dogs, he noted, but German shepherds are more suited to Nova Scotia's climate because of their heavy coats.

Both the training and care of the dogs require daily attention from the dogmaster. Training generally starts when the dog is five weeks old and continues intensively for 14 weeks after which time, depending on the dog, he can be put into service.

"All the time they still have some maturing to do, but they are ready to work," said Davis.

Hovercraft Captain Sailor and Aviator

LONDON (CP) — Is a hovercraft a ship or an aircraft?

Britain's legislation dealing with hovercraft has come down on the side of aircraft and other countries are falling into agreement.

But are the men who command them ship's masters or aircraft captains?

David Wise, chief captain of Hoverlloyd, which runs a service of big passenger-carrying hovercraft 4 plying between southern England and mainland Europe explains: "We are basically mariners. We served our apprenticeship at sea and have been second mates, mates or masters of deep-sea ships.

"But a few of us have also had aircraft experience, either as private pilots or with airlines. This is just as well because these hovercraft are very 'airplane' in style. They were built by the company that used to build the Sunderland flee flying boats.

"The craft they pilot cruise at 60 knots some eight feet off the surface. They carry up to 254 hircles and 256 passengers as well as the pilot, flight engineer, navigator and air stewardesses.

Wise is widely experienced on sea and in the air. A mariner's son from Buckinghamshire, he travelled around the world as a ship's navigator, then joined the British Aircraft Corp. at the age of 26 and became a flight test engineer.

When Hoverlloyd was formed in 1966 he joined with the intention of becoming one of the first men in the world to pilot the big four-engine hovercraft then being planned.

"There was the novelty value, the feeling of playing a part in developing a new industry. In my job in the aircraft industry I was just one of many. Here I was more of an individual, learning a new piloting technique from scratch. The only instruction I got was from the manufacturers. We learned by trial and error."

Hovercraft are expected to have a working life of more than 10 years. But before the end of the decade Wise expects to see a great expansion, worldwide, of hovercraft transport.

Roll and Run

LONDON (CP) — An unexpected hazard of the energy crisis struck a resident of Hampstead, the posh north London suburb, as he left a restaurant. He was knocked down by a hit-and-run roller-skater.

Buses Ordered

LONDON (AP) — Iran has ordered $19 million worth of trucks and buses, including double-deckers, from British Leyland, spokesmen for the giant motor vehicle corporation announced.

Energy Parley: What Premiers Did and What They Said

OTTAWA (CP) — Highlights of what the 11 delegations said and did at the two-day national energy conference, which ended Wednesday:

—Agreement, in principle, was reached on the concept of achieving a single national price for oil.

—Ottawa and the provinces compromised and decided to end the voluntary price freeze on domestic oil products March 31, a month earlier than planned.

—There is to be no widening, during the remainder of the freeze, of the price gap between the West, which uses most of the balance going for a subsidy—paid at the refinery level—to hold down eastern prices.

—Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan was permitted to raise his crude oil wellhead price to $5 a barrel from $4 and possibly to $6 if it could apply only to exported oil.

—Premier Ed Schreyer of Manitoba asked that all energy resources be treated as public utilities.

—Premier Dave Barrett of British Columbia recommended establishment of an oil price stabilization fund, with the money to come from the oil-producing provinces, mainly Alberta and Saskatchewan.

—Premier William Davis of Ontario agreed with the principle that Ottawa have more control over uranium than other resources because of its development potential.

—Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec said development of the $6-billion James Bay hydro-electric project is essential for future Quebec energy needs and that 18 nuclear stations would be needed if the James Bay project is not completed.

—Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick said Ottawa should pay 25 per cent of the cost of a nuclear plant, as a performance guarantee, when it begins producing in the next decade.

—Premier Frank Moores of Newfoundland said it is important that hydroelectric development be a federal priority because of the potential drain on provincial financial resources.

—Premier Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia proposed the federal government establish a research fund to develop new energy forms, referring specifically to Bay of Fundy tidal power.

—Premier Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island suggested his province get a federal subsidy because it must use oil to generate electricity in thermal stations, having no other source.

—John Poyen of Calgary, president of the Canadian Petroleum Association, said "nothing really did happen as far as the industry is concerned" at the conference.

Sweet Reasonableness Prevailed

Open Conferences Lead to Significant Advance

By DON O'HEARN
Thomson News Service

OTTAWA — A good many of you will have watched the proceedings of the Energy Conference here on television over the past two days.

And despite feelings on the results of the conference itself—and there always are those who believe that federal-provincial conferences don't get enough done, a feeling which really is often unknowledgeable—surely you must agree that open conferences, of which this was the first, are a significant advance in the public interest.

There always have been those among the delegates who have been firmly opposed to open conferences. There are others of whom Premier Barrett of B.C. has been the foremost, who have fought to have them open, then there have been still others, such as Premier Davis of Ontario, who have publicly said they didn't care one way or the other but who have privately favored closed meetings because they feel more gets done.

The other main arguments against open meetings have been that the leaders would not speak so frankly and that at least some of them would tend to speak politically, would use the meetings as a forum for their home electorates.

Well, I think we have seen all of these arguments knocked out, particularly at the Tuesday afternoon session at the conference.

There certainly at that meeting, and also at the others which were not, but particularly it, was no holding back on frankness.

There may have been a little political puffery by some of the provincial leaders. But if so it was very little, and not significant.

And insofar as business being done, it was hard to see, taking the proceedings as a whole, how any more business would have been done behind closed doors.

For More On Energy — Parley See Pages 5 and 6

With eleven jurisdictions around a table and dealing with both complicated subjects and self-interest only so much progress can be made on any one occasion.

And as much progress was apparently made at this conference in the open as would have been if it had been held behind the baize-covered doors.

And certainly the fact that the public and the press could follow the full discussion outweighs any slight disadvantage there might have been.

Because now the press, and anyone else who is interested, has had the chance to view from the mouths of the horses themselves just how complicated the energy question is across the country and how the various jurisdictions that make up the nation.

There also was one side benefit which was not apparent perhaps to the delegates themselves but to those, who had participated in earlier conferences.

This was that the statements of the various delegations, knowing that they were visible to the country, apparently were more mature.

As one provincial leader said to me "What a difference in the feds as compared to other conferences."

They evidently were much more reasonable.

At the wind-up of the conference most leaders seemed to be pretty well satisfied with the adjustment in doing their public business in public.

And in the public interest, and the interest of good government, let it be hoped that they continue this way.

Making Plans

Libya Fights Easing of Oil Embargo

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libyan Premier Abdessalam Jalloud has vowed to fight Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's reported proposal to ease the Arab oil boycott against the United States.

He also showed a marked determination of U.S. oil interests in his country.

The premier told a news conference Wednesday the oil embargo against the United States and the Netherlands must be continued. He called for "measures to be taken against those who may be breaking it."

"There is this talk around that the United States' position has changed," Jalloud said, "But the reasons which prompted the embargo still exist. We believe the United States has even added new problems for the Arabs."

He warned that the Libyan government may add to the punishment of the United States for its support of Israel by accelerating its nationalization of oil production and marketing.

The Libyan government has already nationalized the holdings of the U.S. Bunker-Hunt firm and taken over 51 per cent of the holdings of all other major oil companies.

Jalloud also threatened "very serious results" if the oil-consuming countries form a bloc against the oil-producing countries. He warned Japan and the West European countries not to attend the energy conference President Nixon has called Feb. 11 in Washington, and urged them to discuss their problems directly with the Arab producers.

Electrodes in Brain May Let Blind See

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Two blind patients have had tiny electrodes implanted on the visual cortex of their brains in experiments here that could lead to an artificial eye, researchers say.

The experiments are part of a joint research project of the universities of London, Ontario and Utah. Results of the experiments were released Wednesday and will be published later this week in Electronics Magazine.

The experiments here involved implanting wafers about an inch square and containing 64 electrodes on the visual cortex. The operation was done under a local anesthetic so the patients could tell doctors what they were "seeing" and aid in the location of the device.

Although the brain senses pain for the rest of the body, it feels no pain itself.

Electrical leads from the electrodes were carried to a computer which had a power source that stimulated the electrodes in a variety of patterns.

Dr. John Girvin, an assistant professor of neurosurgery at Western, found researchers were able "to present recognizable, simple patterns and letters to the patients."

Dr. Girvin said that while there are numerous problems to be resolved, the work does raise optimism for developments in artificial sight.

The project team reported that one 28-year-old blind Vietnam war veteran was able to draw the patterns he saw.

The experiments here and at Salt Lake City are designed to assist work that will tell scientists how long the visual cortex can take stimulation and how this stimulation can best be used.

Milk Churn Bombs Dropped

STRABANE (Reuter) — A low-flying hijacked helicopter dropped two bombs on the police station in this Northern Ireland border town today. The bombs did not explode.

The bombing followed a recent attack from the provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army that it will "attack on all fronts," including from the air.

One bomb, consisting of explosives packed into a milk churn, fell into the station yard. The other dropped into a nearby garden.

The helicopter was reported to have been hijacked in Letterkenny, on the republic side of the border. The Irish army said it was not one of theirs and probably belonged to a private company.

Incomes Reported

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian families averaged $9,600 in income in 1970, Statistics Canada said Wednesday. The latest available figures, based on an analysis of 1971 Census information, said nearly 25 per cent of Canada's 5,076,000 families had income between $10,000 and $15,000 that year, and almost 23 per cent earned less than $5,000.

Robert Nixon Worried

HAMILTON (CP) — The provincial government is playing "party" with the development of public transportation for Ontario cities, Opposition Leader Robert Nixon said Wednesday. "With its commitment to Go-Urban, the provincial government is taking unnecessary risks," Mr. Nixon told the Liberal Association meeting.

Pipelines to Be Studied

WASHINGTON (CP) — The possibility of new oil and gas pipelines cutting south across Canada from the Arctic will be discussed Jan. 31, when William Simon, head of the Federal Energy Office, meets Energy Minister Donald Macdonald. "We have to discuss the entire picture of oil and natural gas exploration in this critical area," Simon said Wednesday. He speculated "there could be 100 billion gallons of oil up there."

25 Boys Die in Fire

HEUSDEN, Belgium (Reuter) — Twenty-five boys aged between 12 and 15 died in a fire which destroyed their school dormitory in this small town in east Belgium Wednesday night. Twenty-three of the victims died inside the building, apparently asphyxiated by smoke, a spokesman said. Two others escaped with injuries but died a few hours later in hospital.

"The phantom eraser has struck again!"

Fire Closes Montreal Subway

MONTREAL (CP) — Workmen are clearing wreckage and repairing track damaged by a $1 million fire Wednesday that halted the city's north-south subway service for a week to 10 days.

The Montreal Urban Community Transport Commission (MUCTC) located spare buses and called in off-duty drivers to provide alternate transportation during the afternoon rush-hour Wednesday.

But a MUCTC spokesman said "there are never enough buses . . . . We just have to keep adjusting as best we can and ask people to use other routes whenever possible."

The fire, which sent 16 to hospital and destroyed a nine-car subway train, broke out at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday

The estimated 600 passengers on the train followed the flashlights of transit workers through the subway tunnel to the next station.

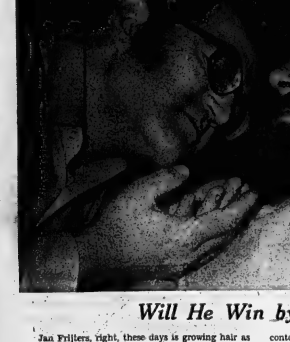
The passengers had to leave the train by going down a ladder from the rear car.

Universities Bar Segregationist From Taping Television Show

TORONTO (CP) — J. B. Stoner, head of a United States political group advocating separation of the white and black races, was to return to the U.S. today without doing a television program because of opposition at two Ontario universities.

Originally he was to have appeared on one of four Under Attack programs which were to have been taped at Trent University in Peterborough, Ont., this week.

Program producer Darlene James said opposition from a group of student radicals led Trent President Ty E. W. Nind to cancel the taping.



Miss James said she then called Brock University in St. Catharines, Ont., and the student council approved the four taping there scheduling Mr. Stoner for this Tuesday night.

"However, word got out . . . and there was an incredible rumor mill," said Miss James.

She said Dr. Alan Earp, Brock's acting president, said a final decision on the tapings is up to the student council but plans should be cancelled if there is any signs of possible violence.

"By Tuesday afternoon the matter was still in doubt and we decided after taping the first two shows last night to cancel the other two," Miss James said.

Big Brother Movement Nearing Establishment

The Big Brother movement has taken a little closer to Belleville. It is expected that the organization will be officially formed within a month.

"But the main problem right now is getting financial support as well as Big Brothers," says Roly Thomas, who is trying to get the group set up in Belleville.

A meeting has been set up for February 6 at which time the board room of the police station.

In the immediate area Treston, there are 35 boys who have already been referred to Big Brothers, said Mr. Thomas. The total of a potential of 200 boys in this area who could make use of the group.

So far there have been 12 firm applications of men wishing to become Big Brothers. They have yet to go before a screening board before being accepted.

Any boy from 6 to 16 who is fatherless is eligible to become a little brother. They are usually referred to the Big Brother Organization through Children Aid Societies or single parents.

Mr. Thomas said that many communities the same size as Belleville and even smaller such as Cobourg already have big Brother organizations.

Anyone wishing to become a Big Brother should be willing to spend about once a week with their little brother. This time could be spent doing activities, anything from going to a hockey game or taking in a movie.

The group aims to provide a male influence for boys growing up without one. The idea is not to replace the father and will not get involved if a father is still in the home.

Those wishing to become Big Brothers may contact Roly Thomas at the Royal Canadian Legion on Campbell streets. Application forms are available there.

Trenton Plan in Proposal Stage

Riverside Greenbelt Concept Ready

TRENTON — The Lower Trent Region Conservation Authority have a busy year setting up official opposition to regionalizing conservation authorities and mobilizing a $750,000 greenbelt scheme.

Members of the authority met this week with consultants and studied the proposed plan that would acquire a strip of land along the length of the Trent River as it passes through Trenton.

The strip would range in width from 50 feet to 600 feet and would be furnished with walkways and pedestrian facilities.

The majority of the cost — though with some town contribution — would be financed through provincial grants to the authority. In turn, negotiators are to begin for turnover of greenbelt properties to the town in 10 years.

Members of the authority attended the plan was in the proposal stage and that plans discussed this week could well be modified.

High on the list of priorities this year will be a strong offensive on recent government moves to take conservation authorities coresponsibility with regional areas. Because of this philosophy change, political boundaries would supercede natural boundaries or watersheds which currently separate authorities.

Bill Lawson, secretary-treasurer of the group, announced today the major item of business for the Feb. 18 annual meeting will be discussion of a formal resolution combatting boundary change moves by the government.

Word of boundary changes or amalgamations float emerged when regional systems in Durham-Northumberland were introduced.

At that time it was rumored the Trent and Ganaraska Conservation Authorities might be persuaded to amalgamate.

Art Latourneil, provincial government director of conservation authorities, an amalgamation could not be forced unless the authorities themselves requested it. This is stipulated in the conservation authorities act.

There was some indication this week is undergoing government scrutiny with changes forecast.

$480,000 Kente Addition

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

BLOOMFIELD — The Prince Edward County board of education has voted to accept plans for an addition to Kente School in Ameliasburgh township and will sign a construction contract.

The decision was confirmed at a special meeting here Wednesday night.

A board press release last November stated the addition would be built for an estimated $480,000.

The addition will include sufficient floor space for six industrial arts room, a home economics room, another classroom, a lunchroom and counselling and guidance centres. There also will be a gymnasium with change rooms and shower facilities.

A library and resource centre now in use at Kente will be converted to a science room and the present general purpose room will become a resource centre.

The addition will, for the first time, provide Ameliasburgh students with facilities for industrial arts and home economics. Students at Kente now are the only pupils in Prince Edward unable to study these courses.

Storage space also is in demand, at Kente.

In November the board noted the education authority will pay 85 per cent of the addition's cost.

Kente School was opened in 1966 and the addition will represent its first large-scale improvement. The original building was constructed at a cost of $355,000 and absorbed the students and staff of eight small schools.

An addition to Kente first was discussed after the creation of a county board of education in Prince Edward.

Plans for a Kindergarten to grade 13 complex were scrapped because of opposition from local residents and a provincial funds cutback.

The concept of an addition, however, has met with general approval since Kente has operated under crowded conditions for several years. The extra space to be provided will eliminate need for portable classrooms at the school.

Trustees last night voted in favor of signing the building contract.

Bill Douglas Caley, new board vice - chairman, felt trustees were being "railroaded into a few shortages" and referred to lack of a partition for the lunchroom, the question of fire doors, gutter lines for the gymnasium floor and paving.

Since the contract deadline for the addition will not arrive until February 4, Mr. Caley suggested a further meeting with the architects to question deletion of some board requests.

Business administrator Ernest Short explained several of the changes. He said it would require three weeks to study the contract "inch by inch, detail by detail."

A motion to sign the contract then was passed.

Bloomfield - Hallowell trustee Edward Rutter moved that all change orders regarding Kente School at this stage of building should be authorized by the board. His motion was carried.

"That way the board will be aware of change orders," said Mr. Caley.

Hydro Shows "Environment" Routes

TYENDINAGA — This reserve is among land areas suggested for providing an alternative route for Ontario Hydro power connections feeding needed energy supplies across the Bay of Quinte into Prince Edward County.

Hydro officials Wednesday night outlined to the Quinte Mohawk council the various routes now to be proposed for the power line which became a controversial issue last year with environmentalists. Suitable alternative routes were researched after proposals to stretch a high-power cable across the Bay's Long Reach brought protests of scenic violation.

The various alternatives are to be unveiled tonight to local interested representatives in Picton. Later, public meetings will be held throughout the area.

Study Federal Hiring Method

OTTAWA (CP) — Temporary federal public servants who feel they are unfairly deprived of benefits because of departmental hiring practices may soon find solace in a study being prepared by the Public Service Commission.

The report may clear up the confused variety of staffing procedures used when administrators turn to extra help.

Of particular concern both to public service unions and governments officials are reports that many temporary employees are being eked out on lawful technicalities to be paid sick leave and vacation pay.

One traditional method of skirting fringe payments has been to lay off the temporary workers before they acquire additional benefits under collective agreements. Some administrators rehire them later to the same positions for another few weeks or months.

Although the practice has decreased in recent years, labor union and government officials concede it still exists.

One difficulty facing government researchers is that the number of employees deprived of benefits in this way is uncertain, a government spokesman says.

Of the 296, 828 departmental employees, 53,681 are counted as "casuals and others" by Statistics Canada.

But even here no plans to do it yet," Mr. LaRue said.

New Municipal Offices For Stirling Council

STIRLING — Municipal offices here are to be moved from the present location in the basement of the village library to the former Wells Ford-Mercury Sales building in the east end of the community.

Renovation plans for the former garage were approved at this week's meeting of council and tenders for the work will be called early next month. Renovations are to be carried out by April 30.

The new office facilities will provide accommodation for the village clerk, the village foreman, council chambers and the motor vehicle licence office

The east end of the building is being prepared for use by the Stirling fire department.

When the municipal offices are moved some time in May, the present quarters will be used for badly needed library storage space.

Volunteer Fire Force Will Be Organized

WINDERMERE — The Lake Muskoka town to have their own volunteer fire department operational later this year.

The reserve already has the equipment — a fire truck and tanker — and just requires the manpower, its council was told last night.

Members of the council decided to retain the services of nearby Deseronto fire department to protect the east end of the reserve.

Council agreed to a six-month contract proposed by Deseronto town council.

Elton Brant, reserve administrator, said the service last year cost the reserve about $1,000. Contract charges are $75 for the first hour Deseronto firefighters spend on a reserve alarm, $50 for each following hour plus $3 an hour per firefighter.

Special label

TORONTO (CP) — Time Canada Ltd. will label its list of best-selling books "U.S. Best Sellers" in the magazine's Canadian edition in response to charges it has been misleading the Canadian public, Stephen Shaw, Time Canada president, said Tuesday.

Time previously listed the 10 fiction and non-fiction books simply as "Best Sellers."

Mr. LaRue said the new label will appear in the Feb. 4 edition. He also said the U.S.-owned magazine is considering lawyer Richard Rohmer's suggestion for a Canadian best-seller list.

"But we have no plans to do

JESSE MASON

Mason Police Chairman

PICTON—Picton merchant Jesse Mason has been re-elected chairman of the town police commission for 1974.

The commission's inaugural meeting Wednesday, opened with a one-minute silence in memory of the late Harvey J. McFarland, a commissioner for more than 20 years.

Picton's newly-elected mayor James Bird will now sit on the three man body with Mr. Mason and Judge Wilfrid Lane.

Mr. Mason noted that the police commission has received a number of applications for the recently advertised job of police constable but no decision will be made until the next regular meeting in February, February.

He said that the commission requires certain information form the Ontario Police Commission before dealing with the applications and is now in correspondence with the provincial body.

Service Has Problems

MARMORA — A service for Christian unity cancelled last Sunday because of hazardous weather, which sent a clergyman's car off the road, will be held Jan. 27.

The service will be held at St. Andrew's United Church. Rev. Karl Clements, whose car skidded off the highway near Deseronto, is once again the speaker.

It was the second year in a row that plans for the service have been disrupted. Last year's scheduled speaker, Rev. C. Vickers of New Bedford, had to be hospitalized just prior to the date and his place was taken by Rev. Gerald Kemp of Marmora Free Methodist Church.

Store Sold

The Deloro General Store owned by Gordon and Helen Nichol of Marmora has been sold.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Marshall of Sutton will take over the business and take possession of February and are planning to move into the apartment over the store this week.

Ponder Ameliasburgh Plan Changes

AMELIASBURGH — A number of changes have been proposed for the township's official plan in effect since 1966.

Council now in reviewing the proposed changes.

Councillors have decided it is now time the plan was updated because of recurring complaints that it was incompatible with the township's zoning bylaw.

But, before officially voting on the issue, councillors want to hear public opinion. A meeting of township ratepayers is to be called some time in the near future.

Changes in the official plan should rectify areas in whose designation in the plan are now outside the areas of zoning changes. Alterations also would provide the municipality with better control over future development as the local plan can dovetail more efficiently with the over-all official now under study and being discussed for Prince Edward County.

The issue has been discussed with council and planning consultants.

Airfield Ready Soon

TYENDINAGA — Development work required to bring a wartime airport on this Quinte Mohawk reserve up to standard is a licensed airfield may be finished this week.

The project has been evolving in the past year and recently moved closer to realization after federal transport officials inspected the site and confirmed the Ste Wavle Air Installation.

Its strategic location and landing strips and hangars has attracted attention of both businessmen and private flyers.

Chief William Brant told the reserve council Wednesday night he hoped all the work suggested by federal transport officials will be finished by Friday.

Work needed included bushclearing and installation of a windsock.

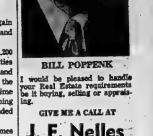
"When this is completed, said Chief Brant, he has been told the department will again inspect the development "and issue a licence."

The field has a runway 4,200 feet long, among the facilities including buildings and hangars left intact when the airport, used as a wartime Commonwealth Air Training Program base was handed back by the airforce.

The field, if it becomes licensed and operational, could be used by private flyers and executive aircraft while there also has been an indication its hangar could see winter storage of private aircraft.

Move Against Speculation

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — A committee established by city council said Wednesday it has prepared a private bill for the provincial legislature aimed at reducing speculation in special low-cost homes in the Kitchener area.



Richard Forler, a city alderman, said Wednesday the bill is an attempt to curb speculation in the six-year-old co-operative program between the city and builders which calls for builders to provide a number of low-cost homes in most divisions in return for permission to use smaller lots and narrower roads.

He said the committee plans to seek council's approval of the bill next week before presenting it to James Breithaupt, Liberal member of the legislature for Kitchener, who has agreed to introduce it in the legislature.

Mr. Forler said the program has resulted in houses costing from $2,000 to $7,000 less than other houses being built in the area subdivisions.

However, he added, officials become aware about six months ago that some of the homes were being purchased on speculation for resale later at higher prices.

"It would be naive not to have expected some speculation by Joe Public," during the last six years, he said, but it was the revelation that real estate brokers had entered the speculation that led to the formation of the committee three months ago.

Filling a Need

They are called Boys' Clubs of Canada but, like the Army Cadets, they admit girls too, so right away let it be said a change in name might be in order.

What about Youth Clubs for instance?

After all, the trend is more and more to equality, and not forgetting that the womenfolk also have their superior qualities.

Note the appointment in recent days of Pauline McGibbon as the new Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

But to get back to Boys' or Youth Clubs, as we suggest they might be termed, Belleville Rotarians had as their speaker this week Charles D. Howes who is Central regional director of the Canada-wide organization and based in Toronto.

Mr. Howes made it clear his organization was not trying to step in to the local scene when facilities might already be available. Certainly Belleville does have a lot to offer the young person, yet at the same time there are many who are left at a loose end, especially during holidays, without the benefit of an organization such as this where they can be with boys and girls of their own age and engage in positive recreational and educational activities.

Remembering the failure of various drop-in centres in the past is to realize such a gap still exists for something of this nature, and with the proven experience of the boys' clubs behind it.

A brochure Mr. Howes distributed notes that in every community hundreds of boys and girls are left to find their own recreation and companionship in the streets, where they often form groups or gangs and risk following the wrong leaders and becoming involved in serious trouble.

It goes on: "Everyone knows the youth explosion has resulted in less respect for adults, their rights and property National statistics show the alarming increase in major crimes by youthful offenders.

"Nevertheless, young people need responsible adult guidance. They need to know that someone cares about them and that there are knowledgeable adults to whom they can turn.

"A boys' club builds good citizens through everyday leadership and guidance in behavior and attitude. Youth of all nationalities, races and creeds are given the opportunity for wholesome recreation and companionship."

As we have observed, there is scope for such a club in Belleville. And, if the happy faces of the youngsters — boys and girls (the age span is 7 to 17) pictured at a leadership development conference in any criterion, then the needs of these clubs needs little further recommendation.

The organization provides full-time professional leadership, supplemented by part-time help and volunteers. Belleville would surely benefit from this kind of group. Its objectives, in brief, are these: to discover the needs of young people, encourage their ests, explore their talents, broaden their viewpoints, dissolve their prejudices, resolve their conflicts, set their goals, and finally, to understand themselves.

These are excellent goals for any young person. With a boys' club here they could see renewed flowering among our young people and lead to healthier community life all round.

Fashion Award

Recognition of Belleville and other smaller communities came recently through the medium of fashion and the Garment Salesmen Ontario Knitted Award.

McIntosh Brothers Store was one of a dozen recipients of Judy awards for the promotion of Canadian fashion.

Congratulations to the Front Street firm and its representative Sheila Nash for this fine achievement which involved competition with larger centres as well.

An interesting facet of the McIntosh store's customer relations is a shopper service for elderly or handicapped persons. It is thoughtful touches such as this, as well as fashion expertise, which confers the mark of excellence and award-winning potential on an establishment.

Need for Capital

Ottawa Will Be Draining Off Ever-Increasing Taxation

By VINCENT ZAGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

Over the next decade, the demand for capital to finance major new projects in Canada will be enormous.

Since a good many of the biggest projects are in the public sector, the drain on the resources of taxpayers—present and future—will also be enormous.

Yet governments show little or no interest in cutting back on spending where it is possible or even desirable to do so.

Consider the capital that will have to be assembled for only a few projects—for one or more extensions of the Interprovincial Pipeline line to Quebec, for the James Bay hydro development, for the construction of pipelines to carry oil and natural gas south from the Arctic frontiers.

Perhaps the $2 billion cost of a proposed second international airport for the Toronto-related area may seem insignificant to the big-money wheeler-dealers in government.

But by any other standards it represents a gargantuan outlay—and for a purpose that would be deplorable even if the price-tag were a fraction of what it is.

The federal and Ontario governments are committed to the $2 billion project, however, and show every sign that they will stubbornly pursue it. After all, what else can you buy with $2 billion in taxpayers' money these days?

The reasons advanced for the project initially seem to boil down to these:

—Quebec is to have a giant, state-owned international airport near Montreal. Therefore Ontario must have one near Toronto.

—Suburbs have grown up around the site of the existing Toronto-area international airport, and residents wish the noisy airplanes would go somewhere else.

Neither reason stands up to close examination. Airports are not like governor-generalships, to be shared among the two major language groups.

And for a fraction of $2 billion, airlines could install devices to reduce jet noise substantially. The cost is about $800,000 to modify a Boeing 707, for example.

And if our airlines don't soon take such measures, they may find themselves barred from a growing number of foreign airports that are beginning to require them.

Travellers from other parts of Canada, departing for or arriving from foreign points, would face a journey of more than 40 miles on congested highways between the existing Toronto airport (which would then be used exclusively for domestic flights) in the north part of the city, and the proposed Pickering airport in the northeast.

The system of dividing travellers between two distant airports—one limited, one domestic—has been tried in a few cities, such as Washington, D.C., and found to be highly unpopular with the public and with airlines.

If Ottawa and Queen's Park insist that the Toronto area have a new or second airport, there is an obvious site for it: Camp Borden, an airport already owned by the Crown, connected by rail to Toronto some 50 miles to the south through relatively open country.

Government experts are naturally reluctant to change their minds about a project to which they have contributed months and even years of study.

But the wasting of billions of dollars of public funds can never be justified—and especially not during the next decade, when our capital needs will be so huge.

Government Will Be Big Employer Again

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — Plans are underway now for this year's summer work program.

If you are interested a piece of advice is to start getting after it now, for experience in the past is that a few months from now complements will start to fill up and the application wicket will get sticky.

And if you are a student looking for employment this summer, or the parent of a boy or girl who is in the market there's another piece of advice.

Try and make the provincial program rather than the federal. For you will get a lot more out of it.

The purpose of the Ontario program, as outlined by minister without portfolio Margaret Birch, who is in charge of it, is this:

"The jobs offered by the youth secretariat are based on the assumption that the government is a unique employer offering unique employment opportunities. Our programs offer work with children in playgrounds, those suffering retardation in hospitals, the elderly in nursing homes, work in correctional institutions and with police forces to name only a few.

Our jobs make it possible for young employees to have access to the unique government employment opportunities and that is the last they must meet."

Stated perhaps more succinctly provincial summer employment does a double job.

It offers both service and training. That is those working in it are all performing a service while they are being getting a training which will help them in their future careers.

They are geared to the economy. And also the program is developed in consultation with the municipalities.

By contrast the federal program has been somewhat of a hit-and-miss-catch-as-catch-can proposal with no seeming purpose with kids doing everything from giving concerts on street corners to publishing radical (and very immature) magazines.

There is, of course, controversy over whether government should be in the business of providing summer jobs at all.

A lot of them probably represent "make-work."

But without getting into this controversy, if we are going to have them, and it seems that we are here to stay, you are getting a better break on your tax dollar spent on them from the province than from Ottawa.

And the more jobs give get least some return. Last year the provincial program cost about $8 million. And that provided 7,000 jobs.

UCS Grant From City Council

Editor:
The Intelligencer.

Alderman Potter in the paper from Mr. Clarence Young has sparked my imagination. Mr. Potter criticized the United Community Services for its implied misuse of taxpayers' money which he claims that organization will receive in the form of a City Council grant.

If my memory serves me correctly the grant was first given for the purpose of engaging what was then termed a Social Planning Professional. If this were the case then the spending of any of the-city grant on other personnel would constitute misuse of funds. If this is not being done then I would, on the basis of present knowledge, say that UCS is not misusing taxpayers' money.

I would like however to take exception to a procedure long used by the UCS which to my mind does indeed constitute a breach of public trust — that is the manner in which the proceeds from the United Way are dispersed to the social service agencies in whose name these monies were collected. The UCS claims that administration of the campaign costs one-third of the UCS budget regardless of its amount. This year the "administration costs of the campaign" will amount to about $10,000. The UCS allocation as printed in this paper some days ago was something over $7,000—the $10,000 I mentioned previously did not appear in those figures. Together these total about $17,000. Add to that total the $12,000 the UCS received last year from the city and the total now reads $29,000. That is a lot of "public money" for an agency which offers no visible service to the community. Perhaps City Council, those responsible for dividing United Way funds, and the Financial Appeals Review Board should determine just what share the UCS does get of United Way funds and what share it should get in regard to its services to the community. And I might add in closing that I have been amazed for several years that none of the other United Way agencies have ever complained of when the UCS skims its "lion's share" off the top of the United Way funds.

A Question of Semantics

Editor,
The Intelligencer,

As an English teacher who persisted in the teaching of grammar long after it had ceased to be fashionable, I cannot but comment on the editorial in which you lament the grammatical errors of usage made by school children and others.

The term "regardless" has always delighted me, as being an obvious mix-up of "regardless" and irrespective". But surely the "cannot help but" mix-up is ever more intriguing. If you had said the kids of today "cannot help learning something," the expensive schools. of it you had said they "cannot help learning something," your meaning would have been clear. But they cannot help learn"—unscramble that one if you can! Fowler's English usage throws some light on the subject on page 345.

You mention also, the confusion of such words as "its" but in your last paragraph did you really intend to write such an observation of Oscar Wilde, or were you alluding to an observation of Oscar Wilde's?

Perhaps our childrens' education is being influenced by what they read in the newspapers.

Yours in a sad cause,
SHEILA LAMBERT
Stirling

Editor's Note: With all due respect to Fowler's English usage, we believe our phrasing and its meaning were clear. The Oscar Wilde reference was in connection with his aphorism: Nothing succeeds like success," and, as you'll recall, the satirical discussed the contents of a new Canadian journal called "Success Magazine".

Fire Dept. Advertisement

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

I was astonished to read a recent advertisement in The Intelligencer inserted by the City of Belleville. I will be most interested in clarification of the following points:

1. Why does a municipal government require the Human Rights legislation by specifying age restriction?

2. What are "the necessary qualifications" for promotion to first year Firefighter? Could the primary qualification, perhaps, be "Male"?

3. What unusual ability could a person between the ages of 21 and 30 have to be 10 status points that would merit an annual salary of $10,288.00?

The position advertised is "Radio-Telephone Operator." Undoubtedly this position is one that could be expertly executed by a disabled person, an older person, or a female person. If a Firefighter is required, why do they not advertise for a Firefighter?

In view of the fact that the Fire Department is supported by municipal taxes, a salary of six or seven thousand a year to a disabled or older person, who would be handicapped to find employment, would not only be financially sound, but also display some social conscience.

In summary, the entire advertisement smacks of blatant discrimination, financial mismanagement, and arranged regard of the Human Rights law of the country.

The Diary of Anne Frank

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

Concerning your article: Memories of Anne Frank's Aunt— Jan. 8th page 4.

Your readers will be interested in the following information:

In 1954 the Swedish journal Fria Ord published two articles commenting on The Diary of Anne Frank. A condensation of these articles appeared in the April 15, 1959 issue of Economic Council Letter, p. 1 and 2.

History has many examples of myths that live a longer and richer life than the truth, and many become more effective than facts.

The Western World has for some years been under the spell of a Jewish girl through the medium of a book purported to be personally written story, "Anne Frank's Diary." Any informed literary magazine or book review would have shown it to have been impossible as the work of a teenager.

A noteworthy decision of the New York Supreme Court confirms this point of view, in that the well known American Jewish writer, Meyer Levin, has been awarded $50,000 to be paid him by the father of Anne Frank as an honorarium for Levin's work on the Anne Frank Diary.

Mr. Frank, in Switzerland, has refused to pay the $50,000 to Mr. Meyer Levin, not less than $50,000 because he had used the dialogue of author Levin just as it was and "plagiarized" it in the diary as being the daughter's intellectual work.

The court in the number of the case in the New York County Clerk's office is 2241-1958. The Supreme Court is the highest civil court and its content thoroughly studied the documentation, exaggeration, and falsification which has often colored the judgement of good citizens. If Mr. Frank used the work of Meyer Levin, wholly or in part to present to the world what he knew best and to believe is the literary work of his daughter, then the truth should be revealed. To label fiction as fact is never justified nor should it be condoned.

CRUSADER FOR TRUTH

Food Prices Review Board

Editor
The Intelligencer

The members of the Opposition in the House of Commons usually spend most of their time in the question period calculated to unseat the government rather than offering constructive suggestions to help particular situations.

Much of the criticism levelled at the government can be dismissed as political manoeuvring. However, frequently they come up with some valid criticism. The Food Prices Review Board is a case in point.

This toothless agency of the government has just made the observation that consumers are being fleeced in the matter of egg prices. They are being gouged by the food processors for their own respect — not just the egg situation.

Review Board chairman Plumptre and her band of consumer consultants may not have the power to go beyond making observations that any housewife could have made over the last year -- the public is being held to ransom by the organized thievery of the food chains -- it is as simple as that.

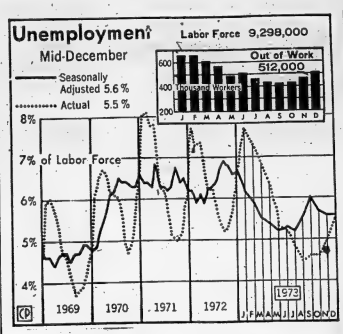
Stanfield, Lewis Approve Accord

OTTAWA (CP) — Common opposition leaders voiced general approval Wednesday for the last-minute compromise reached by Prime Minister Trudeau and the 10 provincial premiers at the national energy conference.

Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield said the short-term solution fits the principles he has been proposing for weeks—one price for all across the country and a federal subsidy to help protect easterners from the rising price of imported oil.



New Democrat Leader David Lewis agreed the compromise means a more generous offer from the federal government to the eastern provinces than Energy Minister Donald Macdonald advanced Tuesday.

The compromise means Ottawa will pay the full cost of the subsidy, partly from the export tax on crude oil, partly from other revenues. Unlike the Macdonald proposal, no province would lose out on equalization payments by accepting the subsidy.

Mr. Lewis reiterated his opposition to giving any future price increase to the oil companies.

Mr. Stanfield said the compromise reflects "a good deal of understanding on the part of Alberta," which has pressed for higher prices for its oil.

"If this conference has finally persuaded the federal government that the formation of a national energy policy must involve the provinces . . . then it's a victory for Canada," Mr. Stanfield said.

Davis 'Relatively Content' With Energy Parley Accord

OTTAWA (CP) — Ontario played a low-key role at the national energy conference which ended Wednesday, but claimed high-key results.

Premier William Davis came to the two-day conference with views—as a major petroleum consumer—that coincided closely with those of Ottawa.

And as the leader of the country's industrial heartland, heavily dependent on the western oil which federal policy has kept well below upward-rocketing international price levels, he says he thinks he got most of what he wanted.

"We're relatively content," he said after the Wednesday finale.

As it turned out, the compromise reached by the federal government and the 10 provinces in private sessions Wednesday met Ontario's request to maintain the price freeze on most western Canada crude oil until March 31.

The conference agreed to establish a committee of energy ministers to work out a program of gradual and economically-reasonable price increases after the freeze ends. Again, that was an Ontario position.

Mr. Davis had also expressed the hope that price parity for crude oil would extend across the country after April 1 and he said he sees that goal agreed upon.

At the same time, the federal government was continuing its tax on crude oil exports to the U.S., returning half that revenue to the producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and Mr. Davis had favored that.

He called the Wednesday settlement a significant accomplishment, adding privately: "I don't think we gave up anything on the short term."

Even more important to Ontario, he said, was acceptance of the idea of a permanent federal-provincial organization to pursue resource development on such things as Alberta's oil sands and a national hydro grid.

"It's now evident that these things are going to move ahead," he said.

The only point on which he had to make any compromise was the issue of a federal subsidy to the area east of the Ottawa Valley which relies on higher-priced imported crude oil.

He had warned Ottawa to pay the whole thing out of general revenue as the provinces would share in any windfall from sale of their own natural resources, he said.

Inquest to Hear Building Details

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — A coroner's jury today entered the ninth day of its search for the source of a switch in medical gas lines at Sudbury General Hospital after apparently narrowing down the area of the fatal error.

The inquest is investigating 22 hospital deaths between May and September of 1973. Up to now, only one death has been conclusively blamed on a patient getting nitrous oxide instead of oxygen.

After touching lightly on hospital construction details Wednesday, the inquest was to plunge more deeply into the subject today, calling Toronto consulting engineer J. T. Gregg, retained by the Ontario government.

He is to be followed by about 30 other construction witnesses, whose testimony is expected to carry through most of next week.

Detective Joseph Woodliffe of the Sudbury regional police testified Wednesday that:

—Examination of the gas pipe system disclosed that the switch in the lines lay somewhere between the outlets in four rooms of a new emergency ward and a pair of oxygen and nitrous oxide cut-off valves on the floor below.

—The officer had been told by Aldo Sferrazza, a foreman with the sub-contractor which installed the pipes, that he used a drawing showing what he called "a crossover" between the two types of gas pipes.

—The foreman had mentioned Aug. 21 to the officer as a date on which he made some "adjustments" in the gas lines, However, Det. Woodliffe described how on Sept. 24 he had watched the foreman rectify the switched gas lines by cutting two side-by-side pipes and hooking them up in reverse.

This occurred in a section of line carrying gas from the two cut-off valves to four rooms of the emergency department.

Jobless Rate Unchanged

The unemployment rate in Canada remained unchanged, in December at 5.6 percent of the 9,298,000 labor force on a seasonally adjusted basis, Statistics Canada reported today. The actual number of jobless rose 44,000 to 512,000 — 5.5 percent of the labor force — but after seasonal factors, Statistics Canada figures it as a slight drop or as virtually unchanged for the month. U.S. May Have to Buy Wheat from Canada

WASHINGTON (AP) — Record wheat exports and a barebones reserve are forcing the Nixon administration to consider importing grain from Canada.

The agriculture department says that by July 1 the United States wheat cupboard will contain 387 million bushels, instead of the 306-million-bushel reserve that had been forecast last September.

The latest prediction would put the U.S. wheat reserves on July 1 at the lowest since 83.8 million bushels were on hand in 1947. It would be less than half the 630 million bushels held last summer.

There is no danger of a bread shortage.

The officials also deny claims by bakers that the price of bread might be $1 a loaf by next spring because of a short wheat supply.

On Wednesday, after a new report on the wheat situation, Assistant Agriculture Secretary Carroll Brunthaver conceded that the supply is being crimped more severely than expected.

The drain from exports, now estimated at 1.2 billion bushels for the year ending June 30, will put further pressure on wheat supplies, he said.

Compromise Agreement Reached

Oil Price Stays Same During Search For One-price Marketing Formula

OTTAWA (CP) — A compromise agreement to hold down national petroleum prices until March 31 and search in the meantime for a permanent one-price marketing system was reached Wednesday in the final hours of the national energy conference.

The agreement, which includes a subsidy program for eastern consumers and a shorter-than-planned price freeze for the rest of the country, was negotiated behind closed doors.

Prime Minister Trudeau and the 10 provincial premiers deadlocked after 1½ days nationally-televised negotiating, hammered out the compromise during a 3½-hour lunch break.

Mr. Trudeau told a news conference the compromise represents only a short-term solution and "the poetry that goes with the plot" will be negotiated at a continuing meetings of federal and provincial energy officials.

If a permanent solution is found, the interim plan will be replaced April 1 by a national single-price system that almost definitely will mean higher gasoline and heating oil prices for western consumers.

There was near-unanimous agreement at the conference that western crude oil must rise from $4 a barrel freeze price that has been in effect since September.

How far it should move toward the current international selling price of more than $10 will be the crucial question facing negotiators between now and the end of March.

Domestic ugrude oil is used in all markets west of the Ottawa Valley while all consumers in and east of the valley are dependent on high-cost imported oil.

The subsidy plan will shield eastern consumers from a gasoline and heating oil increase of 12 to 13 cents a gallon scheduled for Feb. 1. The program will not lower prices or erase the gap of six to eight cents a gallon that now exists between the eastern and western regions of the country. However, the two-month saving on heating oil alone would be about $60 for a family using 250 gallons a month.

The subsidy will be paid at the refinery level to avoid the elaborate administrative arrangements necessary to apply it at the retail level.

Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said the government will check oil company books to ensure that no rip-off occurs as to oil corporations.

The March 31 expiry date for the price freeze is a month earlier than Ottawa wanted. The date was moved back at the insistence of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Saskatchewan won an additional concession by persuading the conference to let it raise its crude oil selling price to $5 immediately, and possibly to $6 if special arrangements can be worked out to protect private consumers from the full impact.

The increase will not apply to crude oil used to manufacture home heating fuel.

Spokesman said the concession to Saskatchewan should have no significant negative effect on the price freeze. The province produces about 11 per cent of all domestic crude oil.

No price increase will take place until after March 31 in Alberta, which accounts for 85 per cent of national crude oil production.

Mr. Macdonald said Alberta was persuaded to hold its price at $4 but Saskatchewan, which lags behind many provinces in per capita income, insisted on immediate increase.

A complex long-term formula to gradually raise western crude prices and hold down eastern costs was presented Tuesday by Mr. Macdonald, but it drew little initial support.

It would have boosted the wellhead price to $6 a barrel May 1 and raised the figure to $8 by sometime in 1976. A $6 price would mean $3 billion annually in new oil revenue which Mr. Macdonald suggested should be divided among the producing provinces, the oil companies, the federal treasury and eastern consumers.

He said Wednesday it is not clear what will happen to the scheme. All provinces likely will have to yield ground in negotiations if a solution is to be reached.

"I think probably it was a little too ambitious to assume that we would come here and, in effect, write a Magna Carta for Canadian energy in two days."

Mr. Trudeau said if negotiations are successful there will be "an agreed reasonable increase" in domestic crude after March 31. This will be followed by a series of "staged reasonable increases" over an unspecified period of time.

He told reporters he is optimistic that a settlement can be reached.

The subsidy program for eastern consumers will cost $240 million during February and March, Mr. Macdonald estimated. It will be financed largely through the federal share of revenue from the controversial crude oil export tax.

He said about $190 million will be available from export tax revenue and the remaining $50 million will come from the federal treasury. Mr. Trudeau said it will be found by cutting other expenditures.

A sore point with the producing provinces since it was introduced Oct. 1, the export tax will remain in force until the end of March.

What happens then depends on long-term domestic price arrangements, but it is expected that the tax will continue permanently in some form. The levy currently is $2.20 a barrel but is scheduled to rise to $6.40 Feb. 1.

The measure was adopted to ensure that Canadian oil was sold to the United States at full international rates.

Mr. Macdonald said the $6.40 rate will apply to both Saskatchewan and Alberta oil during February and March, even though Saskatchewan wellhead prices will be higher. The $6.40 rate has been approved by Parliament and there is no alternative but to enforce it, he said.

He predicted that Saskatchewan might have trouble selling normal volumes of crude oil during the two months. Buyers might balk at the higher price and turn to Alberta where the $4 wellhead rate will still apply, he said.

None of the premiers came away from the conference totally satisfied, but Premier Robert Bourassa said his main objective of subsidized eastern prices was met.

He also was pleased with the reaction to his proposal for an inter-governmental energy planning board to ensure provincial participation in national energy planning.

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta said the agreement on a two-month negotiating period means that "we're starting from scratch" on the major issues. He called the conference useful but said there was "no commitment by Alberta and no concessions by Alberta on a long-term basis."

Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan said the conference moved the country closer to a long-range oil policy but none of the provinces came away winners.

"All that has been accomplished," added British Columbia Premier Dave Barrett, "is that we now have a 60-day time space to deal with federal government proposals.

"No doubt there will be an increase in gasoline prices after 30 days."

Manitoba Premier Ed Schreyer said two of his requests were met—continuation of the export tax and agreement on a "sea-than-world-level" domestic price. Over-all, "it could have been worse."

"We made a good start and yet we didn't," said New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield summing up the sentiments of Atlantic premiers on the short-term pricing arrangement.

Frank Moores of Newfoundland said the conference opened in "a comedy of absolutely" by Ottawa but ended on a more progressive note.

Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia said the firm stand taken in advance by the Maritime Council of Premiers was instrumental in persuading Ottawa to submit fully the retail increases scheduled for Feb. 1.

Premier Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island suggested that the council, formed in 1971, set up a special board to keep tabs on price increases by oil companies.

Ontario, normally one of the most visible participants at federal-provincial conferences, played a low-key role this time as the focus fell on the western oil-producing provinces and the eastern provinces faced with high overseas crude oil costs.

Premier William Davis said he came away from the meeting relatively content. "I don't think we gave up anything on the short-term."

He expressed hope that negotiations between now and March 31 will result in a uniform national pricing system.

Kidnapping Suspect

Antonio Mancuso, 35, is in the custody of a policeman after his arrest in the villa of Cicala, near Catanzaro, in Calabria at the southern tip of the Italian peninsula. Europeans Seek Links to Canada

STRASBOURG, France (CP) — A combination of energy shortages and Canadian self-assertion may be easing the way to closer relations between Canada and Europe, Canadian MPs from Ottawa suggested Wednesday following discussions with their European parliamentary counterparts.

Harold Herbert, a Liberal from the Montreal-area riding of Vaudreuil, said discussions here served to make it clear that differences exist between Canadian and United States viewpoints and that Europeans might want to hear more of Canada's view on vital world issues.

Max Saltsman (NDP—Waterloo) said energy shortages have shaken Europe's self-confidence.

Europeans now may realize there are advantages to having closer relations with a country like Canada which can supply them with vital raw materials or a basis of friendship, Saltsman said.

The Canadian MPs spoke after meetings with parliamentarians from the 17 member states of the Council of Europe, a consultative group designed to influence policies of European governments.

Gerald Baldwin (PC—Peace River) told reporters after the meetings: "Nothing but good can come out of this."

Baldwin was referring in particular to the apparent agreement in principle to a proposal that Canadian MPs should somehow be connected on a formal and permanent basis with the council's assembly.

Cholera Killed 9,000 Turkeys

GUELPH (CP) — Conflicting evidence as to whether two processing companies would accept turkeys from a flock where a serious poultry desease had been detected was heard Wednesday during an Ontario Supreme Court civil suit.

Douglas Carruthers, a Toronto lawyer representing a nearby turkey farmer, said a processing company representative had admitted the company would accept birds from a diseased flock for processing.

The suit involves about $70,000 in damage claims sought by Charles Walker of nearby Melwood against Cuddy Foods Ltd. of Strathroy.

In 1970, the company refused to accept turkeys for processing from a flock in which some of the birds had died of fowl cholera, a form of respiratory infection.

Mr. Walker and Cuddy Foods signed a contract in May, 1970, under which Mr Walker purchased about 29,000 turkey chicks from Cuddy Foods. Mr. Walker was to raise the birds to marketable size and resell them to Cuddy Foods.

The birds were sold in three flocks which, according to the contract, would be ready to pickup and processing Sept. 18, 25 and Oct. 10.

However, pickup for the first flock of hens was delayed until Sept. 22. In the meantime 22 birds died Sept 21 and 28 more died the next day. Test revealed the birds died of fowl cholera.

In his closing argument, Mr. Carruthers said the birds were all healthy Sept 18, the date set under the contract and it then became the "responsibility of the company to remove the birds and assume ownership.

Birds from the other two flocks did not contract the disease until Oct. 11, two days after all the birds should have been delivered for market, said Mr. Carruthers.

Frank Murphy of London, Ont., representing Cuddy Foods said the date on the contract was meant only to be an approximate time for processing. He also argued that ownership would not change hands until Cuddy Foods actually picked up the birds.

About 9,000 birds eventually died, representing about $59,000. Before the rest of the flocks were treated and processed.

Mr. Murphy said his client would have been taking a financial risk if a diseased bird had somehow got past federal agriculture inspectors at the processing line.

Kenneth Bialkowski, a law student articling with Mr. Carruthers testified that a food processing company representative told him his firm would have accepted birds from a diseased flock.

Mr. Bialkowski said he spoke with George Bunting, plant manager of Swift Canada Packers in Hanover Jan. 9 this year.

However, during the trial, Mr. Bunting said the company would not accept birds from a diseased flock.

Mr. Justice Dennis O'Leary of Hamilton reserved judgment to Friday at 10 a.m.

Policeman's Gun Found in Garbage

TORONTO (CP) — Metropolitan Toronto police said Wednesday they have found the gun taken from the holster of a plainclothes policeman Monday during a brawl in a nearby Richmond Hill, Ont., hotel.

Staff Supt. Morgan said the revolver, a 38-calibre police special, was found in a garbage can near Tottenham, Ont., about 25 miles northwest of Richmond Hill following an anonymous tip.

Staff Supt. Morgan said the gun was the same weapon used to fire four shots at the Richmond Hill courthouse Tuesday night. No one was injured in that incident.

Police said the brawl in the hotel began late Monday after two plainclothes officers stopped to talk to members of a motorcycle club. The officers said they were jumped and within minutes everyone in the room became involved in the fight.

Constable Roland Smith said he noticed his revolver was missing after the melee.

Player Dies

WETASKIWIN, Alta. (CP) — An inquest was ordered Wednesday after a 14-year-old boy died in hospital Tuesday night two hours after being injured in a minor hockey game in this community 40 miles south of Edmonton.

Gary Cardon, a Grade 9 student, was struck accidentally in the chest by a stick during a bantam exhibition game and was taken to hospital for an examination.

RCMP said that while the boy's parents were visiting him at the hospital, he started complaining of chest pains and coughing blood. He died within minutes.

Grenada Not Safe To Visit

TORONTO (CP) — Air Canada spokesman said Wednesday the airline is advising Canadians who have booked flights to Grenada that they are taking a risk in visiting the Caribbean island.

The warning follows a week of anti-government demonstrations on the island that have resulted in at least one death.

Wednesday, telephone and telegraph service to the 133-square-mile island were reported cut off and the major airline serving Grenada suspended all flights.

The island, a British associated state, plans to declare full independence from Britain Feb. 7. In recent months Premier Eric Gairy has faced increasing criticism while police have been accused of allegedly beating leaders of a rival political group.

The governor, Dr. Hilda Bynoe, has submitted her letter of resignation to the Queen.

The Air Canada spokesman said Wednesday the airline is not actually advising people not to go to the island.

"... it up to them," he said.

However, he added, the anti-government feeling "seems like a potentially disruptive situation."

Air Canada carries passengers destined for Grenada only as far as Bridgetown, Barbados. From there, they fly to the island on local airlines.

The spokesman for the airline said 22 persons have booked flights to the Caribbean island next week.

Communication Will Dispel Myths About Sex

DR. MARION POWELL

"It's perfectly natural for parents to find it difficult to talk to their children about sex," said Dr. Marion Powell at the first Session in Sexuality given by the Family Planning Association this week.

Topic for the evening was "Sexuality and Communication."

"I find it much easier to talk to my children's friends about sex than to my children," said Dr. Powell.

"But that's no reason to stop trying to communicate with my family."

Director of the Population Unit at the University of Toronto, Dr. Powell has become widely known through her column in the Toronto Star in which she answers questions about sex.

"So many of the letters I receive are from young teenagers who want information they aren't getting either from parents or sex education teachers.

"That's because most adults put up an invisible barrier, when they are forced to talk about sex to people outside their age group. They provide facts, but no emotional support.

"We have all feel comfortable within ourselves about sexuality before we'll feel comfortable with others."

In spite of the way society has marketed sex, and in spite of sex information being readily available, there are still many myths and misconceptions about sexual behaviour.

Dr. Powell said there are still books being published stating that women have weaker sex drives than men, a myth now known to be false.

But even as knowledge about sex increases, myths and misinformation still linger.

"We simply exchange new myths for old." Dr. Powell said. "Perhaps we can never divorce sex from its backdrop of culture."

Until recent years Dr. Powell said, sex manuals were written by ministers rather than doctors, since sexual behavior fell into a moral rather than physical category. From these manuals came much of the misinformation still plaguing society, because ministers were not equipped with correct medical knowledge.

Now that we have information she said, we have the responsibility to communicate it properly to young people.

Doctors and nurses in clinics should be talking to patients about why they're taking birth control pills instead of simply giving impersonal lectures on contraception.

During the question period, Dr. Powell learned that in Hastings County there are sex education courses available for adults through the Home and School Associations, as well as for students.

Through these courses, channels of communication can open up between parents and their children.

Before Dr. Powell's talk, a film, "Communication and Sexuality" was shown, which presented the problems facing married couples who cannot talk to each other about sex. The film advocated that husbands and wives learn to communicate their feelings honestly in order to improve their sexual relationship.

The second meeting in the Session in Sexuality series will be held at Loyalist College next Tuesday night. For more information about the sessions, phone the Family Planning Association, 968-7552.

Standby's Wearing Thin? Try These

If your old standby beef stew or meat loaf is wearing a little thin these days, why not treat the family to a "French" dinner or a special German potato salad. Today's food feature includes recipes from France and Germany. Next week, Germany, China and Mexico.

France

"England as three sauces and three hundred and sixty religions, whereas France has three religions and three hundred and sixty sauces," the French statesman Talleyrand, wrote.

France is the home of the finest cooking in the world and the mystery is not hard to explain. There is a love of eating, a joy in cooking, infinite care in preparation and the insistence on the freshest and youngest of ingredients. There are thousands of books on French cooking and nearly as many styles of cooking French foods.

There is the great cuisine practiced by master chefs who devote a lifetime to it, there is the international French-style food of all the first-class hotels of the world, and there is the food of the home as well as the specialities of the countryside.

Each province offers its own specialty. There are the sundrenched tomato and garlic dishes of Provence; the chicken and wine of Burgundy; the pork and apples as well as the chowders of Normandy so like our own Quebec food. It all adds up to a country where people take a passionate interest in food, where their annual food fairs held since the Middle Ages, where even kings were great cooks, and where friends will still argue over a seasoning or the ripeness of a cheese.

The traditions of French cooking mean perfection, and each small town is filled with specialities, creating gourmet fare from simple ingredients.

Onion Soup

2 large onions
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon flour
1-10 ounce can Condensed Consomme Soup
Salt and Pepper to taste
Gruyere or Mozarella cheese

French Bread

Peel and slice very thinly, 2 large onions, separating the rings, heat butter in large saucepan; add the onion rings and cook very gently over low heat, stirring almost constantly with a wooden spoon, until the rings are even golden brown. Sprinkle with flour and stir constantly until the soup begins to boil. Lower the heat, cover the pan and simmer for about 20 minutes. Season to taste.

Toast 4 slices of French bread or cut rounds from sliced bread. Put a slice in each bowl. Pour the soup over the toast and sprinkle with grated cheese. Set bowls in a 400F oven to melt and brown the cheese. Pass extra cheese to sprinkle over top. Makes 4 servings.

Petits pois frais a La Francaise

2 green onions, chopped
2 tablespoons butter
2-3 tablespoons chopped parsley

Add remaining ingredients except noodles or rice. Bring to boil; reduce heat, cover tightly and simmer 2½ hours or until meat is tender, stirring occasionally. Remove bay leaf before serving over hot buttered noodles or rice. Makes 4 -5 servings (approximately 5 cups).

The Italy Larousse Gastronomique, a veerable French authority on cookery, confesses: "Almost everything can be considered for all the countries of Europe as a true mother cuisine". Italian food is considered by gourmets to be the ancestor of French cuisine in the world-- there being basically three distinct approaches to cooking—French, Italian and Chinese.

The order depends on who you are and where you are! Modern Italian food is the heir of Roman food and although the French are reluctant to admit it, Italian cooking has had a tremendous influence on French cuisine. It all started so the sixteenth century when a French king married an Italian princess and her chefs brought with them the secrets of filet mignon, ice cream and wine flavoured custard called sabaglione.

The first mension of Italian food brings to mind spaghetti. It is believed that Marco Polo brought the first pasta back from China. Pasta today includes more than two dozen shapes ranging from long thin shreds known as Angel's Hair to large packet-shapes called Cardinals' Hats. Unlike Canadians, the Italians do not eat pasta as a main dish but rather enjoy a small serving before the main entree.

Chicken Cacciatore

1-2½ pound chicken, cut up
¼ cup cooking oil
2 clove garlic, minced
2 medium onions, sliced
1½ ounce can Spaghetti Sauce with Mushrooms
1 cup Tomato Juice

Add remaining cheese; cook 15 minutes longer. Serve over hot cooked spaghetti and additional Parmesan cheese. Makes 6 servings.

Ann Landers

Dying Reader Wants Dear Pet Buried, Too

Dear Ann Landers: I am suffering from an illness which has been diagnosed as "terminal." I have accepted it, and this is not my problem. Please don't write me off as a kook. I am serious about the advice I am seeking.

What I need to know is if it's possible to have my pet (dead, of course) buried with me. If not in the same casket, could she be in an adjoining box?

I have a cat who has been my faithful companion for 15 years. We have been through all sorts of crises together. She is my best friend.

I am drawing up a will and I'm afraid no one would take care of her properly after I am gone. I also feel she will miss me terribly. I am considering a clause in my will requesting that she be put to sleep when I die and asking that she be buried with me.

Please don't think this is crazy. In other cultures beloved pets were buried with their masters. Answer, please.—C.F.

Dear C.F.: Each cemetery has its own constitution and bylaws. Some states specify that they will accommodate only human remains. Check to see if the cemetery you are considering will grant your wish. If not, scout around and find one that will.

A 15-year-old cat is equivalent to an 80-or 90-year-old human. Most veterinarians would not hesitate to put such a cat to sleep, according to two Chicago veterinarians.

My best wishes to you, dear, and I don't think you are a kook at all. You sound like a thoughtful, sensitive person.

Dear Ann: I just edited your column swiping to the 14-year-old who asked how much she should tip for a burger and cold drink while shopping. Your reply was, "Any person who sits down to eat in a restaurant and is served should leave something, even if he is seated on a stool at a counter."

Does this advice go for the waitress who takes her time and acts like she's doing you a favor by taking your order, then slops the food down in front of you and ruins your appetite? I operate on the theory that tipping is a reward for good service. And please don't tell me to eat elsewhere—this is the only restaurant in the vicinity. The other waitresses (most of them) are okay, and they get tipped.—Editor Who Has to Eat Out

Dear Ed: A tip is the customer's way of saying "thank you for good service." No tip is the unspoken message that the service was lousy. I heartily support both gestures.

Dear Ann Landers: Regarding that young man who wanted to break his engagement by mail after taking up three years of a girl's time. You called him a "pollard" and said the least he could do was to have the decency to break it off in person.

What about a girl who takes up three years of a man's time, is treated to expensive dinners, plays, concerts, is driven everywhere she wants to go, accepts gifts and finally helps him select a beautiful diamond ring?

Woman Goal Judge

ORILLI, Ont. (CP) — Eleanor McDonald is a goal judge at the local hockey rink. Eleanor, whose husband Jack is a lineman at the rink, believes she's the only woman goal judge in organized hockey in Canada. My husband has always been interested in sports and so to keep harmony in the family I joined him," she said.

Two and a half months before the wedding, she calls it off by phone and keeps the ring.

The guy probably got off lucky at that. Think of what life would be like married to such a gold-digger. The point of this letter is to remind people that sometimes it's the girl who's the rat.—Bay City Reader

Dear Bay: In most states, the male is entitled to the ring when the girl breaks the engagement. If you're the guy who got dumped you ought to check with a lawyer.

Successful Living

She Wants to Keep Own Name

By DORIS CLARK

"People develop feelings that they are liked, wanted, needed and able from having been liked, wanted, accepted and from having been successful. One learns that he is these things, not from being told, but only through the experience of being treated as he would be like married to such a gold-digger. The point of this letter is to remind people that sometimes it's the girl who's the rat.—Arthur W. Combs, 1962.

The above quote appeared in "Notes and News", Mohawk College, Hamilton, Mr. Combs was talking to teachers, and incidentally expressing an important principle of social work.

Just social work? No, A principle of all social relationships. Expect the best of your friends, your children, your colleagues or students: show them you know they have it in them. We count on the good opinion of our human contacts, all life through.

Teen-agers have no monopoly on concern about what their peers think of them.

Dear Doris: Would there be any legal procedures a woman must follow if she wants to keep her own name when getting married?

Career Girl, Winnipeg

Dear Career Girl: The Ontario Status of Women Council is studying this matter at the present time. In the report of their third meeting, held in December, 1972, we read on page four:

"The Change of Name Act was brought in in 1939 because of the need for a procedure to allow a County Judge to change names. In 1972 there was an amendment to this Act and it was decreed that anyone could change their name."

"Some women wish to retain their maiden names on marrying and some wish to assume their maiden names after divorce."

It was reported that there were no legal restrictions to prevent them from doing so unless for a fraudulent purpose - which I have stated more than once in this column.

In other words, a woman is not required by law to assume her husband's name.

Yet there are difficulties when a woman tries to assume her maiden name again. Legal documents and forms require the married name, so more alterations will have to be made in the act before this situation is clarified.

Confidential to Guilty: Those tales about masturbation resulting in pimples or insanity aren't true. The main difficulty about indulging this kind of physical excitement is that sometimes the person doesn't bother to develop normal attachments to other people. Many people do such experimenting at some time in their lives, and there is no reason why you should feel abnormal or guilty about it.

In the long run, it would be better not to masturbate, and if you really want to stop you are going to have to use your will power, just as you would if you were dieting or trying to break some other bad habit. Fill your life with other things that are far more interesting.

(Human relations can hurt - or bring happiness. Get Doris's, a trained counsellor, to help you handle yours, sending your letter in care of this newspaper.

Women Hired As Miners Because of Labor Shortage

TORONTO (CP) — The number of skilled and unskilled workers willing to take jobs at Canadian mines is dwindling and the situation is reaching a critical stage, several mining executives across Canada have indicated in a survey.

Most mining executives say the factors contributing to the shortage of workers are remoteness of the northern sites, the bad image mining towns have in the public eye and too-generous unemployment insurance and welfare programs.

The continued labor shortage has caused mining companies to look toward the use of women in the actual extracting operations besides the office and clerical positions they now hold.

Similkameen Mining Co. Ltd. is pioneering in the employment of women as drivers of 100-ton trucks at its copper-silver-gold mine near Princeton, B.C.

Six women truck drivers are employed now and there are plans to hire two more. The miner as an apprentice in the electrical trade.

Quebec Cartier Mining Co. of Port Cartier, Que., employs women as janitors and the union there is allowing women miners to become members.

Sherritt Gordon Mines Ltd. of Toronto has hired a woman as a mill operator trainee and an miner as an apprentice in the electrical trade.

Quebec Cartier says it believes that offering the wife a job creates an inducement for the family to come to a mining town.

CP News Roundup

Two More Convicted

TORONTO (CP) — Donna Ewing, 22, a Toronto typesetter, was convicted of mischief and Karen Carthew, a York University student, of assaulting a policemen in separate trials Wednesday arising out of incidents on a picket line last year at Artistic Woodwork Co. Ltd.

The typesetter was fined $200 or five days in jail and the York student to one day in jail and ordered to pay $150 or an additional seven days.

The trials bring to 37 the number of people tried on charges stemming from the strike. So far 36 have been convicted. During the four-month strike 108 people were arrested.

Working Poor Get Free Care

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — A trial program providing free medical insurance and drugs for the "working poor" was approved Wednesday by the Peterborough health and social services committee.

Employed applicants who qualify and their families will have their Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums paid for as well as any required drugs and medications. Children will also receive free dental care, optical services and glasses if needed.

The city will pay 50 per cent of the cost of the three-month trial program with the federal government paying the rest.

Aid Limited

OTTAWA (CP) Canadian consular aid to Canadians in trouble in foreign countries is limited by international law and common sense, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Wednesday.

Mr. Sharp said in a statement that Canadian citizens jailed in foreign countries can expect no better treatment than residents in those countries. That was a basic principle of International Law.

Three Killed

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — Three teen-agers were killed Wednesday when the car they were riding in collided with an Ontario Hydro truck on Highway 7, about five miles west of here.

Dead are Leonard Yeo, 18, and his brother, Steven, 17, both of Georgetown, Ont., and the driver of the car, Harry Christie, of Norval, Ont.

Steel Scarce

MONTREAL (CP) — Steel, already in tight supply, will be even scarcer in 1974 says D. P. M. Evans, first vice-president of the Canadian Steel Service Centre Institute.

New Satellite

Howard R. Hawkins, executive vice-president of RCA, shows a model of a permanent communications satellite the company is building. The satellite, expected to be ready by 1975, is being built with lightweight materials and will be launched by a Thor-Delta rocket (model at right). The satellite model was shown in New York where RCA inaugurated the United States' first domestic communications satellite system using Telesat Canada's Anik 2 satellite as an interim basis. Doctors Ask Public Backing For Plea for Research Help

MONTREAL (CP) — Spokesmen representing the top medical research organizations made a pitch to the public Wednesday for support in their appeal to get more money from the government.

A crisis is looming in general medical care because the government has been so niggardly in raising its contribution in research, said Dr. Andre Barbeau, president of the Canadian Society for Clinical Investigation.

The country is losing its medical research talent because research ingrants are too hard to get, said Dr. Barbeau. As a consequence, health delivery will deteriorate because of a lack of talent throughout the medical system.

Other doctors and researchers attending medical meetings here backed up his claim at a joint news conference sponsored by the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies and the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, groups whose members spend most of the research dollars available.

The doctors said the budget for the Medical Research Council (MRC), the agency that distributed about 29 per cent of medical research funded by the federal government, is expected to be increased by 2.5 per cent in the fiscal year 1974-75, from $39 million the previous year to $40 million.

That increase is equivalent to the actual operating budget of a large hospital and the increase for us a year was "just peanuts" compared with what the federal government had at its disposal.

The doctors cited figures to back up their position, saying 1,429 medical researchers received MRC grants in 1970 compared with 1,200 last year. This was an indication, not only of lack of funds, but that researchers were leaving the country.

In past meetings, Health Minister Marc Lalonde has insisted the government has other spending priorities such as social welfare and anti-inflation programs, and couldn't increase substantially medical research funds.

"We want to tell the public" that the health system is in trouble if the government doesn't consider medical research a priority area, said Dr. Barbeau.

Inactivity Top Danger In North

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — The main threat to survival in the cold is the overwhelming compulsion to give up, a seminar on survival was told by Mace Coffey, a defence research board scientist.

Mr. Coffey, 55, has interviewed 20 or 30 air crash survivors and carried out experiments on survival during the 1950s by living alone in the Barrens.

"In the cold there is a constant tendency to do nothing," he said.

But instead of giving up, people should use their energy to keep warm by doing something vigorous. Because the body takes heat from the hands and feet first in an effort to keep the digestive and genital areas warm, hand and toe-flexing, walking and running will restore circulation, he said.

"If none of these work, enter the sleeping bag, close it tight at the neck and do 200 knee bends flexing the toes."

The most important area to watch is the face, which gives off the most heat.

Instead of eating snow, thirsty crash victims should put it in a plastic bag and place it on their warm stomach to melt, avoiding lowering the body temperature by ingesting the cold snow.

Farm Most Dangerous Factory

LETHBRIDGE, (CP) — Life on the farm holds a pastoral attraction for many city dwellers but Dr. John E. Morgan, Lethbridge city coroner, says the farm is the most dangerous factory there is.

"My introduction to Canadian medicine was an accident where a kid put his foot in the reduction gears of a manure spreader," Dr. Morgan said in an interview.

"There were little bones all over the place."

The possibilities of accidents on the farm are endless, he said, with reports coming in regularly as clock-work, of children drowning in ditches, people losing arms and legs in machinery, death by suffocation in grain and so on.

Machinery was the greatest concern. "Familiarity inevitably breeds contempt and this leads to carelessness and shortcuts."

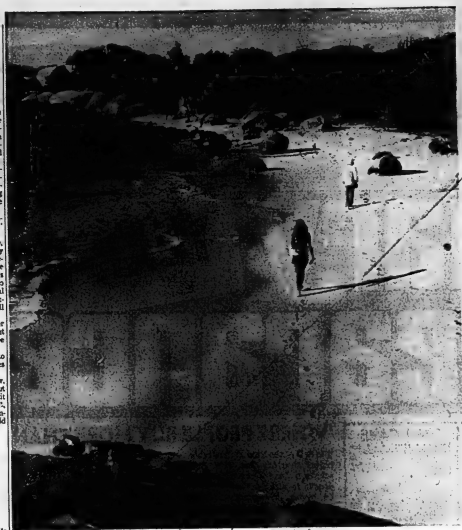
If an accident occurs, there is little help available for the farmer, says Art Baldry of the Workmen's Compensation Board. The board has no authority over farm labor and Mr. Baldry says there is a "crying need" for concentrated work in this area.

"It would include periodic inspection of equipment but . . . it seems to me that farmers, because of their independent nature, don't welcome government supervision and I guess I can't blame them. They operate on a slim profit margin anyway."

Dr. Morgan said the slim profit margin leads to shortcuts and accidents.

"No one under the age of 16 can legally operate a motor car but kids of 11 and 12 have been known to drive tractors of far greater weight, complexity and instability."

Dr. Morgan said both the machine and the farmer have many more potential hazards to overcome before the farm becomes a safe place to work. Farmers should not wear loose-fitting clothes that can be pulled into the works of machinery. Fatigue should not be allowed to impair reflexes. Care should be taken that sub-clinical carbon monoxide poisoning does not numb the brain. Skipping meals lowers blood sugar and can bring on dizziness. Deafness can result from working near maladjusted machines and may result in danger warnings going unheard. The chemicals used in pesticides are a source of poisoning.



Leaf Protein Being Tested

LONDON (CP) — A full-scale trial of leaf protein as an addition to human diet is being launched this year at Coimbatore in south India.

Extraction of leaf protein has been pioneered in Britain, where Norman Pirie of the Agricultural Research Council has developed a machine that can treat three tons of foliage every hour and produce 200 pounds of concentrate containing 60 to 70 per cent pure protein.

The substance, a dark green curd resembling cheese, can be processed to blend with any type of food. It is estimated that it can meet the protein needs of one person for one-fifth of a year.

The project, which will cost about $150,000 ($340,000) is being financed by the relief organization Feed Your Poet. It follows small-scale trials in India and Africa.

Away From It All

Halifax Considers Wildlife Bounties

HALIFAX (CP) — The Halifax County council is reviewing whether to resume bounties on crows, raccoon, wildcats and bears but no snap answers are expected.

"A lot of thought will be put into the matter and the facts studied," said Garfield Killam, chairman of the council's finance and executive committee.

"Just because it has been referred to this committee doesn't mean there's going to be an open season on wildlife"

The issue arose from a complaint by a citizen who wanted something to be done about crows because they were pecking at bags of garbage left at roadside.

Then Councillor Hugh McCabe said cattle had been killed by packs of dogs running wild and last fall a bear had torn part of the door from a man's cabin.

Councillor Nichol Gaetz said seven or eight people had asked him why the bounty for racoons had been removed. He said racoons were believed to have destroyed five acres of corn by climbing up the stalks and eating the ears.

Until about 10 years ago, there were bounties on several animals, including $2 for racoons, $20 for bears and $1 for foxes.

A county official said "quite a number" of the animals were trapped for bounty and some were shot.

To claim a bounty, a resident had to cut the snout from the animal and dispatch it to the county office along with an affidavit swearing to the date and location in which the animal was killed.

The affidavits were necessary to prevent people from killing animals in counties without bounties and claiming the bounty from Halifax.

City Alderman Mrs. John Stanbury, a campaigner against cruelty to animals, said she plans to present to the county council a petition opposing any revival of the bounties.

"We are just being stupid," she said. "We are not doing anything to preserve life. I don't know where this sort of action is going to end."

World Fair Needs Help

Despite a spectacular title, Shannonville World Fair -- one of the Quinte district's oldest rural farm exhibitions -- has a common problem: financial difficulties.

So much so it even went Wednesday to see help in its landlord -- the Quinte Mohawks.

The 123-year-old fair leases its 32 acres from the Tyendinaga Reserve for $140 a year.

The lease is now up and fair president Angus Haight asked the reserve council it it could consider even a lower rent on a renewed lease.

"Our fair seems to be going back far more than it's going ahead and we're just not getting the help to continue with it," he said.

The fairgrounds are used for show purposes for only three days a year. Ball teams also make use the area but are not able to contribute any finances. Since there's no running water though , the property it can't be rented as pasture. Any income grants received are for building repair and maintenance. Main source of income for the fair board comes from dances it organizes twice a year, said Mr. Haight.

"If we didn't have those dances to raise funds...we wouldn't be able to carry on at all," he told the councillors.

Council decided to leave the rent unchanged for the new lease and also "maybe assist the fair in some other manner."

Employment Picture Brighter

New jobs created in Belleville totalled fully fourdreds of thousands of dollars in annual income, the Belleville and District Employment Committee was told Wednesday.

In the Belleville-Hastings County area served by the city's Canada Manpower centre, job registrations at the end of December totalled 1,197 -- compared to 1,286 for the same time in 1973.

The sharp contrast in the statistics drew optimistic reaction in the committee -- where it also was noted there are no provincial government make-work programs this winter.

Fred Semis, city industrial commissioner, estimated that about 120 new jobs had been created in the city in recent times. At the average industrial weekly wage rate, this would mean about $90,000 in additional annual earnings.

There also are other new jobs -- particularly in the service industries -- that are not so easily discerned when seeking statistics, he said.

Seasonally adjusted statistics received Wednesday showed unemployment in December for Ontario was 4.3 per cent of the workforce, compared to per cent in December 1972, Frank Martin, Manpower officer told the committee.

Ski Club Response Enthusiastic

The ever-increasing interest and enthusiasm for cross-country skiing has spawned another ski club in Belleville, Wednesday, as people meet in the YMCA to plan what is tentatively called the Y Cross Country Ski Club.

During the evening meeting, a six-member steering committee was formed and plans were made for the election of an executive at a later date.

Brian Bentley,1 Y physical director, said the running on the club will not be created in such a way as to destroy the recreational benefits of winter sport possesses.

"It's not a formal club," said Mr. Bentley. "It'll be up to the steering committee how it will run."

Already, he said 60 people have registered as members, some by proxy. A $5 membership fee will cover costs of paper for newsletters as well as costs incurred during any social evening planned.

For the time being the Y will be used as a base for the skiers. Members of the instructors course, begun nearly a month ago at the Y, will participate in club activities, thereby acting as resource people for some of the newer members.

New Approach to Drugs

Carol Hedge of Belleville is the first to see the new family discussion kit provided by Alcohol and Drug Concerns to strengthen family life and combat drugs. Mrs. Hedge was given her mailing tube of drug information by David E. Reeve, executive director of Alcohol and Drug Concerns, Inc., who was in town yesterday to launch the campaign. The information is provided free to anyone who writes to request it.

Orange Tube Contains Free Drug Information

A new attack on drug abuse is being launched in Belleville by Alcohol and Drug Concerns, Inc., a Toronto-based organization that runs the Toronto Alph program for young people.

But the campaign is a low-keyed one that concentrates on the family. The family is the key to the solution of the drug abuse problem, says David E. Reeve, executive director of Alcohol and Drug Concerns.

Strengthening family life is the approach his organization is taking. By increasing communication and intensifying family relationships, the youthful abuse of drugs, including alcohol, can be diminished.

"High risk families" says Mr. Reeve, "lack humor, joy of confidence, clarity in communication, trust and respect for one another."

The family discussion program offered by Alcohol and Drug Concerns is designed to eliminate these high risk families by showing them ways to better communication and means of increasing the self-esteem of family members.

Included in the bright orange mailing tube sent free to any family that requests one are pamphlets on starting family discussions and booklets with information on drug drugs currently in use by young people.

"Part of the drug problem is parents' lack of information on their children's attitude toward drugs," says Mr. Reeve. "Teachers are now as knowledgeable about drugs as their students, but parents are still lagging."

Belleville and Trenton are the third and fourth communities to be included in the Alcohol and Drug Concerns family program. The scheme was tested in Brampton and Bramalea, where the response was good.

Anyone wanting the mailing tube of drug information and family discussion helps can obtain one free by writing Alcohol and Drug Concerns, Inc. 15 Gervais Dr. Suite 603, Don Mills, Ont. M3C 1Y8.

Front Street Revisited

Murray Atkinson, left, former manager of Loblaws Front Street store, has bought the business and is operating it as an independent supermarket. Assisting him as a consultant is David Kane, another former Loblaws Front Street store manager, under whom Mr. Atkinson worked for 20 years.

Back at the Old Stand

Murray's back.

After 30 years in the grocery business on Front St., former Loblaws store manager Murray Atkinson has bought the business and is operating it under the name, Murray's Food Market.

Mr. Atkinson's absence from the Front St. store was brief. Loblaws closed it in October and Arndco's took over. The former manager bought the store and opened it to its independent Jan. 21.

"Business in this store has been terrific over the years," says Mr. Atkinson, who first joined the operation as a school boy 30 years ago, handing out baskets on Saturdays. "This store never lost money and it has the potential of being the best grocery business in town."

Complete renovations will be made, with new flooring and a green and white decor. Music will be piped in and a coffee bar installed. People remember shopping here with their parents and it seems like home to them," says Mr. Atkinson. "I've got ten to know their ways and their wants, in fact, they've ruled me."

Loblaws Front St. store started in 1927 and was enlarged in its present size in 1939. At that time it was Loblaws largest store in Canada. But the supermarket business continued to grow, Council gave its approval for Mr. Larry to attend the Toronto meeting this Thursday recognizing the importance in keeping abreast with municipal industrial considerations.

finally outpacing the Front St. store and leaving it, at the time of its sale last fall, the smallest in the chain.

The store's size, not its profit balance was the reason the chain abandoned the store. Loblaws has a new image, indicated Mr. Atkinson, and no matter how much money the company spent on it the space limitation would prevent the store's coming up to the requisite image of big-ness.

When Mr. Atkinson joined the retail grocery business 30 years ago, Front St. had 17 grocery stores. All are gone now, but the downtown area can still support one supermarket operation he feels.

"Front St. is one of the best shopping areas in the country," he says. "Nowhere else do you get as much variety in one place. The merchants are renovating and fixing up their store fronts and downtown is going to grow. We'll grow right along with it.

Skilled Shortage 'Critical'

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

A shortage of skilled and industrial machine workers is a business production problem including the Belleville district in its continental proportions.

Now, the Belleville and District Employment Committee is pondering whether high schools might help in the search for a solution.

Committee members Wednesday wondered if the school system generally was sufficiently emphasizing skilled-trades training as an alternative for students not interested in other aspects of education.

One indication may come from Loyalist College, where a post-secondary skill training program has drawn little interest in recent times, Fred Bemis, Belleville industrial commissioner told the committee.

"The college has "excellent facilities" for preparing students for skilled industrial tasks, he said. Its industrial maintenance mechanic program at present has only 15 student training under Canada Manpower auspices.

"There's a terrific demand" for students of the program, said committee member Jim Staveley, and participants usually have jobs even before graduation.

By statistical comparison there are 380 students taking Manpower's various basic training programs to update their education at the college.

"We've nearly 400 people taking academic upgrading. That's a terrible figure. How many could have been encouraged to stay in school and take training?" Mr. Staveley queried.

Mr. Bemis wondered how much the situation was created by student drop-out whose interests lean toward training for jobs in which "they work rather get their hands dirty. And these are a very import-ant part of industry."

He said shortage of skilled tradesmen -- machinists, tool and die makers -- is "generally critical" in Canada and the United States. Industry has to rely on immigrated European tradesmen -- notably from Germany and Britain -- to take up some of the slack.

"Maybe we should invite someone from the school board to discuss what's been done to encourage students with mechanical skills to stay in school," he suggested.

The committee agreed to write the school board to request it send a representative to the committee's next meeting Feb. 20.

Loyalist College offers apprenticeship instruction in motor vehicle repair, electrical construction, maintenance and machinist courses.

The training is given by the Industrial Training Branch of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, who registers the candidates and provides the program.

The candidate must be 16 years old and have a grade 10 standing. The apprenticeship period varies from two to five years, but the training period is shortened in some trades for those with grade-12 standing.

The province currently offers at various centres, apprenticeship training in more than 100 construction, motive power service and industrial, trades.

Canada Manpower, retraining courses offered at Loyalist are welding, industrial maintenance mechanic, domestic electronics and accountancy.

Review of Plan Urged

The city should provide every opportunity through public meetings for Belleville citizens to look into the city's new official plan before it becomes law.

That is the request of Mrs. Vera Heimbach, 44 Elizabeth Crescent, who last year led a fight against construction of townhouses in a new subdivision proposed for her area.

She asked that the city set up proper machinery to handle areas of complaint against the new city plan.

In the past, public attendance at such public meetings has been poor, not because people do not wish to waste their time when their complaints are ignored.

She trusted that at public meetings on the city plan, more consideration would be given to complaints.

Alderman Jeffrey said that although council had not received birth the views of complainants against the proposed east end subdivision, "we are still willing to listen and want to hear what you have to say."

Alderman Jack Ireland said there had been a "tremendous amount of input" by task forces in connection with the city plan.

Alderman John Slock, special planning advisory committee chairman, urged residents to take advantage of the public meetings on the city plan, the first of which will be held later this month.

Charges Added

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — More charges have been laid against five persons arrested in the seizure of 2,000 pounds of hashish at Toronto International Airport two weeks ago.

Police set a street value on the seizure at $1 million.

The five-Robert Wilson Rowbotham, 24, of Beeton, Ont.; David Matthew Cripps, 28, of Mississauga, Ont., and Carl Frederick Miner, 19, Linda Hope Martyniuk, 23, and Stephen Charles Assaff, 20, all of Toronto-were originally charged with conspiracy to import cannabis.

The new charges against them are conspiracy to traffic in cannabis, conspiring to possess cannabis for the purpose of trafficking, importing and possession of cannabis for the purpose of trafficking.

The five appeared in provincial court Wednesday and were remanded to Jan. 31 in Ita a date for a date for a preliminary hearing.

Four of the five are out on bail. But Assaff has been unable to find two sureties to produce the $15,000 bail required.

Alarm Box

Belleville firefighters responded to the following call for assistance during the 24-hour period ending at 8 a.m. Thursday:

Wednesday, Jan. 23, plug-in for car investigated, no damage, 7:46. Low-pressure test on development on North Park.

Beards Bring Bonanza

Jan Fritjers is always well-groomed. Only, he just won't shave these days.

And he's happy about the hairiness that's sprouting more bushily each day- And so are his customers.

The 25-year-old Belleville General Hospital employee is competing for a prize in the Loyalist College beard-growing contest.

So far there's been a hard-cultivating contestants in the competition, and more are likely, says Nick Markanastasakis, operator of the Front Barber Salon on Front St., in charge of registrations.

Along with fellow judges T. A. Raycroft and Bob Thomas, Mr. Markanastasakis of the Kinsmen Club which is sponsoring the event. — Nick will be judging final results at the carnival's Klondike Night dance in Ben Blecher Auditorium Feb. 2.

As a barber, one thing Nick says he's noticed since registrations started is that fewer men have been cultivating goatees. One hasn't shown up almost entries to date.

Carnival prizes are offered for the fullest beard, most original style--and the trimmest goatee.

Paper, Boxes Broken Into

Belleville police report that thieves broke into a number of Globe and Mail newspaper boxes throughout the city last night.

Six of the boxes in the East Hill area had their locks pried off and and unknown quantity of cash removed. Deputy Police Chief Harold Reid said.

Believe It or Not

Donald Aide, of RR 2, Stirling, didn't believe it, and probably, neither did the hen that laid this peculiar egg. The five-ounce egg isn't really one, but two. Inside the thin shell, measuring 8¼ inches around lengthwise, was a double yolk and another fully developed smaller egg. Mr. Aide explained that when he found it earlier this week he had drilled a hole in each end to drain the fluid. But with this accomplished, the farmer discovered it still rattled. Enlarging one end, he discovered the egg inside an egg.

Tree Planting, Dredging Proposed by Alderman

A "massive" tree planting program along the banks of the Moira River with the aim of reducing water temperatures and improve fish spawning has been proposed by Belleville Alderman Stu Meeks.

The alderman made the proposal at Monday's meeting of city council when he introduced a notice of motion calling for the program with its costs to be charged to the 1974 city budget.

To achieve the desired results, however, the alderman feels the Moira River Conservation Authority and municipalities in the watershed north of the city, would have to carry out a similar program.

The alderman's notice of motion will be discussed at the next meeting of council.

Another proposal suggested by Alderman Meeks was that the mouth of the Moira be dredged to remove silt and improve spawning beds.

He suggested the silt could be used as topsoil for the development of East Zwick's Island park.

The alderman quoted a ministry of natural resources official at Napanee as stating that Pacific salmon were expected to congregate at the mouth of the Moira.

The fish could be encouraged to spawn, resultant sports fishing could prove an immense economic benefit for the area, he said.

The alderman's proposal for dredging the river mouth was referred to the city manager for report.

Films Previewed

By AL ZABAS
Staff Reporter

Several hilarious have developed in the first of a monthly series of experimental and avant garde film programs slated to begin at the Corby Public Library Saturday. But they're not something co-ordinator David Brockleshy cannot or hasn't already put right.

One of four film shorts Brockelshy planned for Saturday could not be obtained from the National Film Board of Canada and neither could a spare.

In place of TCHOU-chou, an animation produced by Yuri Norstein, Brockelshy will be showing Dimension, directed by Jacques Godbout. The film has received six Canadian film awards.

Norstein's Hedgehog Pas Des Deux, a sequel to Ballet Adagio, and David Bairstow's Morning on the Livevre will also be shown. The six-film program starts at 7 p.m.

Dimension and three other films, Michael Mill's Evolution, Ryan Larkin's Street Musique and Ballet Adagio were previewed Wednesday in the film library.

Of the four, Evolution shatters Larkin's theory of evolution, by using it. Man didn't arrive on land through a slow process of growth from single to multi-celled creature, but rather leaped out from the water suddenly. It was a purely accidental arrival, and humorous at that. The animation, or "cartoon" as one very young lady in the audience called it, depicts the peculiar forms of mutation that gave birth to man. Punctuation: it's a strange world we come from; Master Jack.

Street Musique, directed by Ryan Larkin, consists of a series of scenarios in which colors are focused into precise gems and transform into lines emeling into further colors which re-form into an empty screen. Humorously, shapely constantly regroup to form creatures of the imagination as well as men. .

Ballet Adagio, a film about ballet models, displays the bodily tension and precision required by ballet artists David and Anna Marie Holmes in performance. The camera that stretches a 2½ minute segment to 10 minutes.

Dimension, the last film shown Wednesday, creates and alters the physical surroundings of its two characters. It displays the trials and tribulations endured to create furniture adaptable to human use. It concludes with a dream and escape.

Habs' 'Kiddie Corps' Comes Through Again

By GLENN COLE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The kiddie corps came through for the second consecutive game for Montreal Canadiens Wednesday night but it took a greybeard to get the defending Stanley Cup champions moving.

The Canadiens were trailing Toronto Maple Leafs 2-0 with 13 minutes gone in the second period when Henri Richard won a ninth goals of his sophomore season before the period ended.

On Shutt's first goal, Gardner snapped the faceoff away from Leafs' Darryl Sittler and fed it to Shutt who scored on a 40-footer shot.

On Shutt's second goal, Lambert and Gardner combined to take the two Toronto defencemen out of the play and Shutt forced Lanny McDonald to give up the puck in first goal, Gardner fired a blast past Wilson.

It was the second game in which all three have seen heavy duty because of injuries to frequent Lemaire, Yvan Cournoyer and Chuck Lefley, the Canadiens' top scoring trio.

In other action Wednesday, Pittsburgh Penguins dumped St. Louis Blues 4-1, Los Angeles Kings clipped Minnesota North Stars 3-1, Detroit Red Wings clubbed California Golden Seals 6-2 and New York Rangers defeated Atlanta Flames 4-1.

Canadiens 4 Maple Leafs 3

"That was an important game for us," said Montreal coach Scotty Bowman. "That put us 19 points ahead of them and we have two games in hand."

"Three of our goals came off screens," Bowman added, noting that Peter Mahovlich got the game-winner at 11:38 of the third period after winning a draw to the right of Wilson. It was his 19th goal of the year.

Penguins 4 Blues 1

The Penguins, playing before 13,324 fans, their first capacity crowd of the season, made St. Louis their third-straight victim.

Bob Kelly and Steve Durbano, acquired from the Blues last week, engaged in slugging matches with former teammates Bob Plager and Bob Gassoff respectively.

Gasoff, who led the Western Canada Hockey League with 380 minutes in penalties last season while performing for Medicine Hat Tigers, was ejected from the game for being third man in the Kelly-Kelly scrap.

Winger Dan Maloney broke a 1-1 tie at 7:41 of the second period and the Kings moved into fifth place in the NHL West, two points ahead of last-place Minnesota.

Butch Goring and Frank St. Marseille got the other Los Angeles goals with Dennis Hextall supplying Minnesota's only goal after only 29 seconds of the first period.

Red Wings 6 Golden Seals 2

Pierre Jarry scored his ninth and 10th goals of the year to power the Wings past the Seals, who now have dropped 18 straight road games. Walt McKechnie got both California goals.

Rangers 4 Flames 1

Centre Jean Ratelle, returning after missing five games with the flu, scored his 16th and 18th goals of the year as the Rangers dumped the Flames.

Vic Hadfield and Bruce MacGregor got the other New York goals with Al McDonough replying for Atlanta.

Rob Walton Traded

Saints in Tailspin

By NEIL CAMPBELL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Maybe breaking up the Walton family can get the struggling Minnesota Fighting Saints untracked.

The Saints traded centre Rob Walton to Vancouver Blazers Wednesday night after dropping a 4-1 decision to New Jersey Knights in a World Hockey Association game.

For the Saints, who were in contention for first place in the WHA West Division in the early weeks of the schedule, it was the 10th loss in their last 12 games.

The defeat left them in fourth place, five points ahead of the fifth-place Blazers but seven behind Edmonton Oilers and Winnipeg Jets, who share second place.

Walton, who came to the Saints from Seattle Totems, had eight goals and 23 assists in 44 games for Minnesota, was benched Sunday night.

He came to the Saints with brother Mike, a National Hockey League veteran. Mike ailed for ninth place in the WHA scoring race with 20 goals and 32 assists.

Defenceman Kevin Morrison had a goal and two assists for the Knights, who have won three of their last four starts and now trail fourth-place Quebec Nordiques by only three points in the WHA East Division.

In Wednesday's only other WHA game, the Blazers coasted to a 5-3 win over Cleveland Crusaders.

Blazers 6 Crusaders 3

Vancouver scored four times in the first period on Bob Whidden, Cleveland's reserve goalie. Regular Gerry Cheevers played the last two periods.

Mike Walton scored twice for Vancouver while Bill Young scored all three Cleveland goals. John McKenzie, who missed 20 games with a broken hand, scored his fourth goal of the season for Vancouver.

The defeat stretched Cleveland's winless streak on the road to 16 games, including 13 losses.

CRUSADERS INJURED

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — Cleveland Crusaders of the World Hockey Association said Wednesday defenceman Larry Hillman and right winger Skip Krake both have been benched with injuries received last week in Edmonton. The club said the two had received severe knee strains. Hillman will be out indefinitely, the club said, and Krake will be sidelined for a week to 10 days.

Three Bobcats Shine As East Ties West 6-6

By ALAN TEEWORTH
Sports Staff

TORONTO — The three members of the Belleville Bobcats selected to the Metro Junior B Eastern All-Star team proved their worth last night at St. Michael's Arena here, contributing five points and excellent checking efforts to the East's comeback 6-6 tie with their western counterparts.

Jim Richardson, Mark Coates, and Norm Jones were the three Belleville players in the game, with Richardson picking up a goal and an assist, Coates three assists, and Jones doing some fine work at centre on the team's second line.

The East, down 5-3 after two periods of play, scored three markers in the third period to the West's one to gain the tie, with all three goals coming from the line of Richardson, Coates, and Pickering Panthers' Gary Murphy.

Richardson scored the first goal of the third period, firing in his own rebound after a pass from Coates. Pickering defenceman Brian Roll also received an assist on the play.

Murphy scored the second goal in the three at 11:46 of the period, when he squeezed the puck in the side of the net past a surprised West goaltender in the person of Wexford's Bruce Knaggs.

Murphy also scored the sixth and tying goal of the game for the East, firing into the open net past Knaggs off Richardson's rebound. Richardson had taken a pass from Coates.

Jones, although not picking up any scoring points, did play an excellent game between Oshawa's Bruce Newton and Peterborough's Steve Casey. Jones didn't lose a face-off all night, and contributed some solid checking efforts, many times covering up for a sometimes shaky East defence, in his own zone.

The West jumped into an early 2-0 lead almost before the East had their equipment off the bus, scoring two goals within the first four minutes of the game.

Wexford's Brian Ross opened the scoring at 1:49 of the first frame, with Bramalea's Dean Hartwell making it 2-0 at 3:57.

The East tied the game up by the 10:17 mark on goals by Casey, and Oshawa's Dave McKee.

Coates received an assist on Casey's goal, as did McKee.

Romano Carluccl scored at 19:12 of the period to give the West a 3-2 lead at the end of the first.

The other was scored by 16-year-old Paul Gardner of St. Mike's, the league's leading scorer and a surefire pro prospect.

Gardner scored the goal, the first of his two in the game, on a great break-away effort, after taking a perfect pass from King City's Cameron Thomas. Gardner made no mistake in putting the puck past Peterborough's Rob Duncan in the East net for the score.

Gardner's second effort was almost identical to the first, this time with the pass coming from Wexford defenceman Greg Turner.

For his efforts, Gardner was chosen the game's most valuable player, receiving the Percy Crombie Memorial Trophy, as well as being chosen the game's first star. Peterborough's Casey was chosen as second star, with Pickering's Murphy, the third.

Proceeds of the game were shared between the Ontario Sports Writer's and Sportscasters Association to aid in their work with crippled children, and the Charlie Conacher Cancer Fund.

With All-Star and Belleville Bobcat teammate Jim Richardson checking on the action, East captain Mark Coates wrestles with West's defenceman Greg Turner, from the Wexford Warriors, for the puck along the boards in last night's metro Jr. B All-Star game at St. Mike's Arena. Both helped in the East cause as the team came from behind to gain a tie with the west. 64. Richardson scored one goals and added one assist, while Coates picked up three assists.

Temperature in 50s as Games Open

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. (CP) — With years of planning and the opening-day pageantry behind them, organizers of the 10th British Commonwealth Games turned their big new stadium over to athletes hunting for gold.

Christchurch today had its moment of glory when Prince Philip opened the Games and presided over a colorful spectacle in which 11 Commonwealth areas took part.

So far, 38 countries are definite starters in the next eight days of competition. Sri Lanka had only a flag-bearer at the opening but no athletes entered.

Hundreds of the 1,700 competitors and about 25,000 spectators jammed Queen Elizabeth II Park for three festive hours. The ceremonies lasted an hour longer than scheduled.

They left chilled to the bone by a biting cold wind that drove temperatures into the 50s although it's summer in New Zealand.

Despite the gloomy weather, brought on by a rare cold wind from Antarctica, it was a superb opening for the 33,000-seat stadium. Track and field events start here Friday (5 p.m. EST today).

Cannon boomed and thousands of pigeons were released and attempted to sweep around the stadium. The wind forced some off course.

Bands played, a contingent of Maoris sang and danced, and a 2,500-voice choir performed.

The Canadian team was led by Jamie Paulton of Toronto, gold medallist in badminton four years ago at Edinburgh. Most of the team was present for the ceremonies.

The New Zealand national band played Aloutte as the Canadians marched past Prince Philip. The program described Aloutte as "the song of the Mounties."

The men combined black pants and red jackets while the women wore white pleated skirts, red jackets, white hats and carried white handbags.

Sylvia Foks of New Zealand won the honor of being the first woman in Games history to carry the baton, bringing the Queen's message stressing the common links between competing countries.

Canada is expected to be strong in swimming and diving, but the Australians have their white hids gunning for gold in the freestyle events.

In the other eight sports—track and field, shooting, cycling, boxing, badminton, wrestling, weightlifting and lawn bowling—there will be some medals including gold, but Canada isn't regarded as a power in any of them.

Four years ago, 11 of Canada's 18 gold medals came in swimming and diving. In all, the Canadian team won 66 medals.

In addition to track and field, competition begins Friday in swimming and diving, badminton, lawn bowling, boxing, shooting and weightlifting.

At the poolside, gold medals will be awarded in the women's springboard, 100-metre freestyle and the men's 400-metre freestyle relay.

Bev Boys of Pickering, Ont., the defending champion, is favored to repeat but Terri York of Vancouver could provide an upset.

Coach Don Webb of Toronto said he expects Miss Boys to win again and "would really like a sweep although I don't think that would happen.

"The Australians and English have some pretty good divers and we don't know how Cindy Clinesmith will perform under pressure."

The 100-metre freestyle gold is expected to go to Australia, with 13-year-old Jenny Turrall and her friend, 14-year-old Sally Lockyer, the favorites.

Canada's medal hopes are pinned on Cindy Wright of Vancouver, Gail Amundrud of Ottawa and Anne Jardin of Port-a-Claire, Que.

In the 400-metre freestyle relay, Canada will go with Brian Phillips of Winnipeg, Gary MacDonald of Missions, B.C., Bruce Robertson and Ian MacKenzie both of Vancouver.

They're expected to be in the medals although Australia is favored.

The only other medals on opening day of competition will be in track and field. Canada is not represented in the hammer throw or the 3,000-metre steeplechase.

In the other final events, the 10,000 metres, Jerome Drayton and Dan Shaughnessy, both of Toronto, may pick up a medal. However, the overwhelming favorite is Dave Bedford of England.

Bedford, a controversial athlete who had a British businessman pay his way rather than travel with the team, holds the world record of 27 minutes 31 seconds for the distance.

But even if he doesn't win, African runners are favored over the Canadians.

In badminton, the No. 1 seed, Paulson, has a first-round bye while Jamie McKee of Toronto meets Ray Stevens of England and Wayne MacDonald of Vancouver plays Tan Aile Mong of Malaysia.

In women's play, Jane Youngberg of Vancouver takes on Frances Evong of New Zealand and Nancy McCinley of Toronto plays Barbara Beckett of Nigeria. Judy Rollick of Vancouver meets Sylvia Ng of Malaysia and Mimi Nilsson of Vancouver puts against Joan Jones of Australia.

No Thrill for Russell

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

As player and coach of the Celtics, Bill Russell won plenty of big games in Boston. Wednesday night he beat them, but the thrill was gone.

"It was just another game," Russell said following Seattle's 98-97 triumph, the Super-Sonic's first National Basketball Association victory over the Celtics in Boston or anywhere else in two years. "We need a couple more wins."

With Milwaukee Bucks, Chicago Bulls and Detroit Pistons all playing excellent ball in the Midwest Division, Seattle's only apparent hope of making the playoffs is to win the Pacific Division title. The third-place Sonics trail Los Angeles Lakers by 6½ games.

In other NBA action, the Bucks ripped Buffalo 114-88, Detroit Pistons whipped Portland Trail Blazers 121-95, Houston Rockets downed Atlanta Hawks 114-104 and Phoenix Suns stopped Cleveland Cavaliers 118-105.

In the American Basketball Association, Virginia Squires downed New York Nets 118-116, Denver Rockets tripped Memphis Tams 106-99, Carolina Cougars beat Indiana Pacers 122-101 and San Diego Conquistadors topped Kentucky Colonels 106-90.

Kennedy McIntosh's 20-foot jump shot with 20 seconds left and two free throws by Spencer Haywood with three seconds to go enabled Seattle to upset Boston.

Fred Brown had 26 points for the Sonics, Haywood had 23 and Dick Snyder 19. Covered Jo scorers with 32 points and John Havlicek added 22 for Boston.

Bucks 114 Bravers 88

The crippled Bucks opened a 20-point lead late in the third quarter and rolled over Buffalo behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's 38 points.

Pistons 121 Trail Blazers 95

Detroit, with Don Adams scoring 11 quick points, surged to a 36-14 first-period lead and cruised past Portland.

Curtis Rowe led the Pistons with 26 while Bob Verga had 22 and Sidney Wicks 20 for the Trail Blazers.

Rockets 114 Hawks 104

Houston was led by Rudy Tomjanovich with 29 points and Mike Newlin with 26. Lou Hudson was high scorer for Atlanta with 32.

Suns 110 Cavaliers 103

Forward Keith Erickson made two free throws and a three-point play in the last two minutes to spark Phoenix which had to rally after being outscored 31-18 in the first period.

Five Swords Share Scoring

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cincinnati Swords appear to be making a move toward a successful defence of the Calder Cup, emblematic of the American Hockey League championship.

The Swords, who had rough going earlier in the season, defeated Baltimore Clippers 5-1 Wednesday night.

The victory lifted Cincinnati into second place in the Southern Division, two points ahead of Baltimore, and only four behind the leading Hershey Bears, who beat Springfield Kings 5-3. In the only other game, Virginia Red Wings defeated Richmond Robins, Southern Division cellar-dwellers, 5-3.

Five different players scored for the Swords, including Pete McVah, recently returned from Buffalo Sabres of the National Hockey League.

Brian Murphy scored for the Clippers to ruin goalie Barry Bromley's bid for a shutout. The Sabres recalled defenceman Billy Harris from the Swords after the game.

The Bears needed three quick goals in the final period by Jim Hrycuik, Jim Pearson and Dean Schermerita to dethrone the Kings. Robin Burns and Blaine Stoughton were the other goalgetters. Doug Volmar, Wayne Chernecki and John Dobie scored for the Kings.

The Red Wings moved to within three points of a playoff position in the Southern division before 9,150 fans at Norfolk, largest attendance for any league game this season.

Len Fontaine led the winners with two goals. Dale Cook tied the score at 3-3 early in the third period, but it was Ed Hays' goal that put the game out of reach after Fontaine had registered his third of the night. Three of Richmond's five goals were supplied by Serge Lajeunesse.

OFFICIALS NAMED

MONTREAL (CP) — Referee-in-chief Scotty Morrison has named veteran referee Art Skov and linesmen Matt Pavelich and Willie Norris to handle next Tuesday's 27th annual National Hockey League all-star game in Chicago. Skov refereed two previous all-star games. It will be the ninth appearance for Pavelich as an all-star game official, and the first for Norris.

MOSS NAMED COACH

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Perry Moss, an assistant coach with Chicago Bears of the National Football League since 1970 and head coach of the Canadian Football League Montreal Alouettes, 1960-62, was named Wednesday as quarterback coach of Green Bay Packers. Moss, 47, fills a job vacant since the departure of Bart Starr.

Kingston Upset 4-2

OSHAWA, Ont. (CP) — Queen's Verdun Maple Leafs face Hull today in a bid for first place in Division II of the Canadian midget hockey round-robin tournament.

Both squads now have four points, along with Manitoba after the third day of matches for players 16 years and under.

In Division I, Kingston and Saskatchewan share the lead with four points each, despite Kingston's 4-3 upset defeat to Thunder Bay.

Verdun's second straight win Wednesday came on two goals by Wayne Singleton, who led his team to a 6-1 win over Fredericton Red Wings.

In other action, Saskatoon Blazers edged Vancouver North Shore 5-4, Clarenville Caribous of Newfoundland beat Calgary Rangers 7-4 and St. James Canadians of Manitoba edged Nov Scotia's East Hants Penguins 5-4.

Kingston has the day off today, while the Blazers have an opportunity to move into first place when they meet the Rangers.

Move Over, Smokies

The ANAF Dukes and the Smoke Eaters, neck and neck in the standings all season, met head on Monday in the Belleville and District Darts League.

Dukes pulled out a 7-4 decision and earned a share of second place with the Smokies. The two teams are eight points back of front running Barflies who continue to dominate the league.

Monday, Barflies turned back 418 Mosquitoes 9-2.

Two strong contenders clashed at Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 99 where the Foreigners downed the Yardmen 7-4.

Gamesbots locked horns with the Elks in the final match of the night. Elks pulled out a narrow 6-5 win.

All Eyes on the Puck

Frankford Earns Tie With Lindsay Juniors

FRANKFORD (Special) — Second place Lindsay had its hands full in Lakeshore Junior C Hockey League play here Tuesday night. Frankford Huskies, in fifth place, scored four consecutive goals in the third period to earn a 4-4 tie with the visitors.

Bob Scott, Rob Arbuckle, John Murphy and John Masterson took care of the Frankford blitz.

For Lindsay, ahead 3-0 heading for the final 20 minutes, it was Steve Richardson with two goals leading the way. Bill Abercrombie and Ken Jenkins shot the other goals for the visitors.

The Lindsay skaters came out on the long end in the penalty department, picking up 16 of the 24 minors assessed. Lindsay players also served two majors, Frankford had a misconduct to go with its eight minors.

Huskies complete their league schedule at home Tuesday, January 29 when Port Perry will be the visitor.

When seven and eight year olds play hockey, it's strictly for fun and the puck's the thing. San Luck Gardens player is surrounded by friend and foe alike as he attempts to control the puck in Stephen Licence zone during Belleville Minor Hockey Association novice division game. The young goalie gets down for a better look and two other players follow his example.

Welland Out

WELLAND, Ont. (CP) — Welland Merchants of the Ontario Hockey Association Senior A series announced Wednesday they have decided to withdraw after less than one full season in the league.

Allan Talmage, a local lawyer and president of the club, said Wednesday the decision is effective immediately. He declined to make any further comment. The team has experienced financial problems during most of the season and had received assistance from the league since shortly before Christmas.

The Merchants were in last place in the six-team circuit with four wins in 26 games.

It was Welland's second attempt to enter a team in the OHA Senior A league. An earlier entry folded in 1965 after two full seasons.

National Chinese Opera Is on Tour of America

By MICHAEL BENNETT
CP Correspondent

Chang Fu-ch'un carefully dabs a circle of red paint on the tip of his nose to complete the mask of the Monkey King. The face looking back at him from the mirror wriggles its ears and smiles.

Rich silk costumes hang in solemn rows, yellow embroidered with royal symbol dragons, scarlet warbonnets for gentlemen, designs of gold, orange and green. Lesser officials will be clad in blue or dark robes and even peasants will wear silk, spotted with patches.

Elaborate head-dresses of tufted pseu-de-soie and shimmering silver, a sculptured jewelled crown of a regal concubine and black gauze hats with long wings on each side sit beheaded on a nearby table.

Backstage with the National Chinese Opera, half way through its North American tour, is almost as sacred in this country as it is in Taiwan.

Preparations are seriously undertaken; only cancellati are allowed to make an occasional joke. Performers are strictly forbidden to communicate with the audience beforehand and there is no peeking out from behind the curtain.

Impresario Harold Shaw of New York, who calls his first look at the classic Peking Opera in Taiwan in 1958 "one of the most remarkable experiences in my life," was shocked when he finally arranged to bring them to this continent. He found that the company required no flouty "star" dressing rooms, even though the 80-odd members of the cast are the finest actors, singers, musicians and acrobats of the six opera troupes in their homeland. One area is allotted for women and another for men.

Vicky Kuo was born in Shanghai and raised and educated in Taiwan. She was approached by Mr. Shaw to act as interpreter and narrator for the company while studying for her doctorate in history at Tufts University in Boston. Mrs. Kuo returned to Taipei for a month to write the narration, purposely sparse "because many of the elements are universal and if I explain too much, sometimes it can insult the audience's intelligence."

In selecting the program for the tour, the group decided on a broad representation of the extant remains of an ancient heritage dating back more than 2,000 years rather than the essence of Chinese opera. The symbolic, subtle gestures of the hand, and the sung and spoken arias at the highest possible pitch with the most fierce possible—and the piercing falsetto Fiorlura still are there, but easily the most popular selection is the Monkey King with its brisk plot and acrobatic dancing.

"If we perform in China, the emphasis will be on singing. People go there for the vocal performances. You can tell by the audience reaction whether it is largely Chinese or Western by the way they applaud. If the singing parts get a lot of applause, you know a lot of Chinese are in the theatre. Otherwise, it's usually pretty quiet," Mrs. Kuo said.

"Most of the audiences have reacted very positively, even to the singing pieces which we didn't think North American audiences would appreciate. There is a play, Two Loyal Officials, and we didn't think they would appreciate it. I remember Mayor (Thomas) Bradley of Los Angeles came up to Mr. Shaw and specifically congratulated him on Two Loyal Officials.

"With that piece, there is practically no stage movement. Just three people singing a different range of tones. So apparently, the cultural barrier is not as great as people sometimes think."

The opera designation, however, is misleading. It is really folk theatre, dating beyond the annotated form of music begun during the Tang Dynasty of Emperor Cheng (1115 BC to 1078 BC.) Singing and dancing, the most vital elements of Chinese theatre, had already been well developed when the written version of Chinese history appeared.

Peking Opera suffered a telling blow when the Chinese mainland fell to the Communists in 1949. During the cultural revolution, Chiang Ching, wife of Mao Tse-tung, declared it feudal, reactionary and degenerate. Virtually overnight, thousands of years of culture was replaced by "revolutionary model plays," drably celebrating the class struggle.

The art found its sanctuary in Taiwan and, encouraged by Mr. Shaw, appropriated funds for five drama schools, where children as young as eight learn singing, acting, and the exhilarating, acrobatic dancing for seven years.

"I like to say that Chinese opera is basically a folk opera, developed purely from the people," said Mrs. Kuo. "So there is not much scholarly research done. Actually, people are just starting now."

YOU TODAY TOMORROW

There is only today between you and tomorrow

Which is why Canada Pension Plan benefits will be increased today and will be kept in line with the cost increases of tomorrow

What this means to you as a beneficiary

From January 1st 1974, Canada Pension Plan benefit payments will be adjusted to reach . . . then maintain a level in line with the actual cost of living.

If you are receiving monthly benefits that began during the period 1967 to 1973, your benefits have been recalculated so that the amount you receive in 1974 is related to the actual increase in the cost of living over the years your benefits have been paid. When you receive your January 1974 benefit cheque you will see that it has been increased. This increase in your payment will vary from 8% to 20% and will depend on the year in which your benefit first became payable.

In future years, if living costs continue to rise, you can expect further increases in your benefits based on current cost of living data.

What this means to you as a contributor

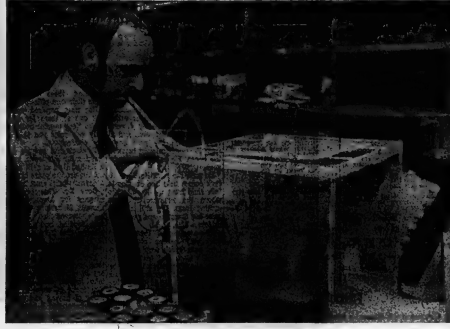
As a contributor to the Canada Pension Plan, you are building a basic and portable retirement plan for the future and at the same time providing current protection for yourself and your dependents against the possibility of severe disability or early death.

In order to protect the value of your eventual benefits, the Canadian Parliament has passed legislation which ensures that the contributions you make today will give benefits that maintain the purchasing power of today's wages twenty, thirty or even fifty years from now . . . when you need it!

To achieve this, the Government plans to have the earnings ceiling — the maximum amount on which contributions are paid and on which benefits are calculated — increased each year so that it will reach, and then keep even with the average earnings of Canadian industrial workers. This ceiling will be raised from $5,600.00 in 1973, to $6,600.00 in 1974 and $7,400.00 in 1975.

The new earnings ceiling means that the year's basic exemption — the initial amount on which you do not pay contributions — is changed from $600.00 in 1973 to $700.00 for 1974.

These changes also mean that the maximum employee contributions will increase from $90.00 a year in 1973 to $106.20 in 1974. Your contribution is matched by your employer. In the case of self-employed persons, the maximum annual contribution is increased to $212.40 for 1974 as against $180.00 last year. For earnings of less than $5,700.00, there will be no increase in contributions.



The change in the earnings ceiling means that the maximum retirement pension will rise from $30.71 for pensions effective in December 1973 to $134.97 for those whose pensions will begin in December 1975. As the maximum average levels for the years after 1975 continue to rise, so will the maximum retirement pensions in those years. There will also be increases in the maximum values each year for disability and survivors' benefits.

Working on Flies

Malcolm Fitz-Earle, a researcher in genetics at the University of British Columbia, says genetics provide the answer to control over insects by changing them from pests to beneficial helpers of man. Dr. Fitz-Earle is shown isolating fruit flies in a laboratory. (CP Photo)

Tinkering With Insect Genes Could Win Long-time Battle

VANCOUVER (CP) — The war against insects may be won by tinkering with their genes to produce such mutants as bugs that can't bite or tactics flies that don't carry sleeping sickness.

It's all part of the science of genetics, the selective breeding of life to eliminate certain characteics or reinforce certain others, and a group of University of British Columbia scientists say genetics offer the best answer to insect problems.

Malcolm Fitz-Earle, one of the scientists, said in an interview the future of genetic research is almost limitless, offering hope of elimination or careful management of insect pests.

Agricultural pests contributing nothing to the food cycle of larger animals could be eliminated, or could have their numbers reduced to manageable proportions, for example, Dr. Fitz-Earle said.

Mosquitoes or blackflies could be bred so they would bite but not cause a blemish, while disease-carrying insects could be replaced by disease-free varieties.

"We're working to produce characteristics in insects favorable to man's interests," said Dr. Fitz-Earle.

"The conventional chemical techniques of controlling insects have numerous weaknesses, the most notable being that insects build up a resistance and the chemicals have an unfavorable effect on the environment.

He said genetic control appears to have no undesirable side effects, but cautioned that research still is relatively new and there's no guarantee side effects may not emerge later.

"That's why I hesitate to emphasize eradication of insects," Dr. Fitz-Earle said. "Rather, we propose bringing insect populations down to a tolerable economic level.

"You can never be certain that an insect which appeared to have no effect on the food cycle, for example, might not have some purpose we haven't discovered."

Research in genetics has centred on two areas, he said, with the first focussing on insects which are vital to the balance of nature but have characteristics such as biting which are bothersome to man.

"You take your target pests and replace them with counterparts developed in the laboratory which have different chromosomes," Dr. Fitz-Earle explained.

"By flooding the laboratory insects into the population, you eventually produce your desired characteristics genetically and replace the undesirable ones."

He said the other area of research concerns pests which eat agricultural produce but don't add to the food chain.

"In this area, it's fair game to introduce a temperature-sensitive lethal factor. The insect spring, for example, but as the temperature goes up in the summer, they're wiped out. It's a time-bomb effect."

Although man could theoretically through genetics, Dr. Fitz-Earle said, it involves an "incredible" amount of work to reach that stage.

"It may take two to 10 years or more. It's really impossible to make an accurate estimate."

One factor holding up research is the unwillingness of most world governments, with the exception of the United States and Australia, to finance genetic research.

"I suspect they're largely ignorant of what we're trying to do," the UBC researcher said.

"There's probably a great deal of pressure exerted by the chemical companies."

Forced Treatment For Drugs Likely

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia is taking note of a compulsory treatment program for Japanese drug addicts that may be adopted for the province's 10,000 or more drug addicts.

The Japanese program has reduced the number of heroin addicts to 100 from 40,000 in less than 10 years through compulsory hospital treatment, rehabilitation and, if necessary, the penal approach.

Dr. Conrad Schwarz, chairman of the B.C. Medical Association's drug habituation committee, said he foresees a program of compulsory hospitalization and treatment in the province.

"If a drug addict is not admitted to hospital on a compulsory basis, in some instances he will be required to report regularly to a doctor or treatment centre," he said.

Malcolm Matheson, chairman of the criminal justice co-ordinating council in B.C., recently disclosed proposals for compulsory medical detention or quarantining of addicts.

Dr. Tadeusu Shimomura, deputy director of the National Institute of Hygienic Sciences in Tokyo and a member of the International Narcotic Control Board, spoke about the success of the Japanese program on a recent trip to Vancouver.

"In 1961 to 1962, the number of heroin addicts was estimated at 40,000," Dr. Shimomura said.

"Many of them were slum-dwellers with no regular occupation or prostitutes."

In 1963 the country introduced a program of counter-measures.

Last year, there were fewer than 100 narcotic addicts in Japan.

Dr. Shimomura said the program has wiped out illicit trafficking routes and known addicts have been cured "almost 100 per cent within two to three months."

Before the program was instituted, addicts were admitted to hospital only when they volunteered. Now, doctors and law enforcement officials must identify an addict for compulsory hospital treatment.

Once a patient has been diagnosed, a report is sent to authorities who ask a psychiatrist appointed by the state to confirm the diagnosis.

The patient may then be ordered to hospital for one month. If this period proves insufficient, the narcotic addiction examination committee authorizes continuing treatment of up to six months.

The five-member committee includes individuals with a comprehensive knowledge and experience in the medical treatment of narcotic addicts and laws.

To cure the addict, the "cold turkey" withdrawal approach is used, depriving the addict of his drug, but if withdrawal symptoms are especially acute, tranquillizers or hypnotics may be prescribed.

Dr. Shimomura condemned the use of methadone in treating addicts.

"The essential feature of the problem of narcotic addiction lies in physical and psychic dependency upon drugs. To change dependence on heroin for another drug dependence would not solve the problem."

Take Precautions

OTTAWA (CP) — Motorists should be equipped to cope with hazardous winter conditions, reminds the Consumers' Association of Canada. Among necessary items motorists should carry in their cars are a brush to remove snow, a windshield scraper for ice, tire chains, a battery booster cable, sand or ashes, a shovel and a flashlight. Batteries, especially should be checked regularly, the association suggests.

SYDNEY, Australia (Reuter) — Singer Barbra Streisand said today she would like to do a concert tour of Australia—for a flat fee of $1 million.

Miss Streisand's New York agent made this point in a telephone talk with officials of Australia's Peter Stuyvesant Trust.

The trust, founded in 1963 for development of the arts, had planned a 10-concert tour for Miss Streisand.

The trust's executive director, George Hawkes, said the asking fee is out of the question. However, Hawkes said a new round of negotiations is planned.

Hawkes said he was still hopeful that an arrangement could be worked out.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — More than 2,000 spectators gate-crashed a government-owned movie theatre to see the movie A Clockwork Orange.

It was the first movie with explicit sex scenes allowed to be shown by the censorship board.

Government authorities decided to let the gate-crashers stay to avoid incidents after the crowd theatre filled up Tuesday night and tickets ran out.

At the same time, censorship officials announced that the movie Last Tango in Paris also will be shown in Mexico soon.

"Our policy will be that we will censure the movies until people get tired of them and don't see them anymore," a board official said.

To Your Good Health

Calcium Cause Of Pseudo-gout

Dear Dr. Thosteson In the last year and a half my knees became very sore and swollen and I finally went to an orthopedic specialist. After several tests (blood, heart, etc., and x-ray) he said the pain came from too much calcium between the bones. He called it pseudo-gout.

He said the next time an attack occurs (as if one ever is) to take fluid from my knee to see where the inflammation was coming from. It's still kind of sore but it comes and goes in a minute.—Mrs. G. M.

P s u d o-gout (pseudo-gout) causes attacks of joint pain which very much resemble gout, and with pseudo-gout, the knee is most often the joint that is involved. (With gout, the big toe is most often involved, although any joint may be.)

As with regular gout, an attack can make the joint swollen and hot and very painful, during which the attack subsides—only to recur. From the standpoint of the patient's misery, he might as well have one as the other.

However, the cause is substantially different. In gout, crystals composed of pure uric acid form and cause the attacks. With pseudo-gout, the crystals are calcium crystals.

By removing fluid from the knee the next time an attack occurs, your doctor wants to make the diagnosis certain by identifying the typical calcium crystals in the fluid. That also is part of the treatment—removing fluid from the affected joint or joints, and injecting hydrocortisone.

Obviously with pseudo-gout, the medication used for gout, to reduce your uric acid level, will not help.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is electrolysis for hair removal safe? I heard it could leave marks. What is the length of time to have an area cleared? I heard that dermatologists do not do this, and recommend a beauty salon. Why is that?—Mrs. A. W.

Yes, electrolysis is safe, and is in general use for that purpose—removing hair. Since a needle has to be inserted at each hair root, there can be small scars, but they are very small.

Only a small area is done at a time, as it is painstaking work with each unwanted hair treated individually, so the length of time to have an area cleared would depend on how much area you want.

It would be a waste of a dermatologist's other skills to ask him to do this sort of work—and much more expensive. It should be done by a registered electrologist, whether in a "beauty salon" or not—but generally electrologists have their own offices.

For time required and cost, ask one of them for an estimate. Your regular doctor probably can refer you to a qualified electrologist.

Electrologists require careful training for this work, but it is a limited field of skill and does not require the years of training a dermatologist must have.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I had surgery for hemorrhoids and fissures 11 months ago, I still have uncontrolled movements and bleeding, and pass clots of blood. I also have a lot of gas. Is this normal and how long will it last?—Mrs. E. E. L.

You had two problems rather than one, as bleeding and recovery is pretty much bound to take longer, but 11 months? You make no mention in your letter of having had post-operative care, and I have repeatedly urged that such care after surgery of any type is necessary for best long-term results. Short-term results, too, so far as that goes.

Go back to your doctor for whatever you may need to additional treatment now.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have arthritis and am taking indomethacin three times a day. It helps me more than anything I ever took before. Now I am afraid. Won't I have some side effects? Will be looking for an answer in the paper.—Mrs. F. D.

Maybe you will have some side effects and maybe you won't. Side effects aren't something that always happens. They are something that may happen.

Instead of worrying about what might happen, just be glad you are one of the patients who are helped by this drug. If side effects do develop to any serious degree, your doctor will take you off that medication.

It's fine to be on guard; it is pointless to expect that the worst is going to happen when usually it doesn't.

Fitness Boom In High Gear

OTTAWA (CP) — The fitness boom is moving into high gear in the federal public service, with more and more government departments providing facilities and programs for employees.

The health department, spurred by squash-playing Health Minister Marc Lalonde and his fitness and amateur sport branch, is pressing other departments to try preventive medicine in the form of physical fitness programs for government workers.

In a number of departments, employees came in early for workouts before starting their regular jobs and other departments provide gym and shower facilities for quick calisthenics at lunch time.

Sandy Keir, a consultant for Recreation Canada, part of the fitness branch, says the idea of physical fitness as an important factor in public service life will spread throughout the government.

The health department, the post office, the energy department and the public works department now have various fitness programs with other departments expressing interest in the idea.

Mr. Keir says an organized program is necessary for real fitness but even walking to work is better than no exercise at all.

He wants more shower and changing facilities in government office buildings. If civil servants had such facilities, he believes, they might jog or bicycle to work, or even skate in the winter on the ice-covered Rideau Canal.

He says there is an actual health hazard if employees are forced to sit behind their desks for eight-hour stretches without any opportunity for exercise.

In his view it is an employer responsibility to provide facilities for exercise, even if not a full-scale gym.

As yet there is no overall policy on fitness in the public service. Some departments subsidize their programs while in others the employees chip in to rent a school gym for their workouts.

The RCMP, which stresses physical fitness in its training programs, now wants to provide facilities and assistance to keep the force in top shape even in the office.

The Bank of Canada, now building a new headquarters in downtown Ottawa, is considering space and equipment for fitness programs.

That's good, says Mr. Keir. Usually in the past the idea did not occur until a building was complete and then there was no room available.

Even members of Parliament have been bitten by the fitness bug. Exercise facilities also have been provided in Confederation Building, where many have their offices just a short walk from Parliament Hill. Unfortunately, they also have a fleet of mini-buses to carry them that short distance.

Health Minister Lalonde, trim and fit at 44, plays squash and tennis two or three times a week and doesn't smoke. He seems a more avid fitness fan than some of his predecessors.

Former health minister John Munro was—and still is—overweight and his chain smoking is the basis for many of his jokes to reporters.

Judy LaMarsh, who held the health portfolio before Mr. Munro, gave up smoking while in office but is not exactly underweight.

With more and more government offices going on the fitness road with support from Mr. Lalonde and encouragement from Sandy Keir, the stereotype of the overweight, paunchy civil servant may be on the way out.

Sulphur Stockpiled

A train-load of sulphur leaves Shell Canada Ltd.'s Waterton gas plant in southern Alberta, where elemental sulphur is extracted from raw natural gas. Officials of major sulphur producing companies predict rising prices will reduce the rate of stockpiling, which began when a sharp drop in the price of sulphur made it ingractical to ship it out of the remote parts of the province. Smokers' Lot Better

CHICAGO (CP) — Smokers have never had it so good these days. Laws prevent them from lighting up here and there, such as in public transport vehicles, but generally they can puff to their heart's content.

Not so 300 years ago. Smokers in the past faced such penalties as having their noses slit, castration, flogging, banishment, even death.

Dr. David Schlander, writing in the Journal of the American Medical Association, reports that in Persia, smokers had their lips, ears and noses cut off while robbers had their hands poured into their mouths. Others were burned alive for their smoking sins.

While today's non-smoker would hardly sympathize with these measures to deter smoking, he'd probably agree with King James I of England who once said that smoking is "a custome loathesome to the Eye, hateful to the Nose, harmful to the Braine, dangerous to the Lungs, and the blacke stinking fume thereof, nearest resembling the horrible Stigian smoke of the pit that is bottomeless."

Dr. Hollander's views of smoking are simple.

"Incessant smokers for the most part can choose the site of their cancers," he writes. "The cigarette smokers may prefer to risk cancer of the lung; pipe smokers cancer of the lip; cigar smokers cancer of the tongue."

Losses Compensated

EDMONTON (CP) — Farmers will be eligible to receive up to $20,000 per claim for livestock lost due to acts of God or predators under a new program initiated by the Alberta agriculture department. The program will not cover losses due to disease, negligence or circumstances that might have been covered by adequate insurance.

Indonesian Students Are Stirring Again

JAKARTA (Reuter) — Indonesian students, once a powerful force in the nation's politics, are stirring again.

In 1966, thousands of students storming through Jakarta streets helped bring about the fall of President Sukarno.

They had allies in the army units led by General Suharto, who had put down an abortive attempt at a Communist coup the previous year.

Now students take to the streets, in limited numbers so far, to protest against the policies of President Suharto's government.

The government has reacted calmly so far, cautioning itself with warnings that demonstrations are officially banned and detaining two or three demonstrators for usually brief periods before releasing them.

Demonstrations have been banned since the end of 1971, when Suharto threatened to use the army to put down protests which threatened the country's hard - won stability. Targets of protests then ranged from high rice prices to a plan by Mrs. Suharto to build a $45 million tourist playground called Indonesia in Miniature.

In the last few months the fragmented student movement has concentrated on the government's economic policies.

Small groups of students, with names such as The Debt-Paying Generation, Anti-Luxury Committee and Mobilizers of the Indonesian Young Generation for the Future, have staged small demonstrations against foreign investment and aid policies particularly. They say excessive foreign investment is harming local businessmen and that high dependence on foreign aid will saddle the country with huge debts in coming decades.

Students also complain of corruption and say the government's development program is not bringing relief from poverty for the mass of the archipelago nation's 130 million people.

Japan has been singled out among foreign investors for criticism. In mid-December students draped a national flag over a huge Toyota sign atop Indonesia's biggest building, a Japanese-built office and hotel in Jakarta.

There have been many protests against the gulf between rich and poor and the luxurious way of life of many Indonesian businessmen and officials.

The government has taken notice of some of the criticisms, and several Jakarta newspapers have come out with sympathetic editorials.

The government recently announced easier credit terms for small businessmen and pointed out that under long-term government policies, foreign companies operating here must work hand-in-hand over their business to Indonesians.

It says that capital and technical skills from abroad are needed to develop the country's potential wealth and speed expensive programs for social justice.

Religion is an explosive issue in a country 90 per cent Moslem.

In September, about 500 Moslem students raced into the parliamentary debating chamber to protest against a marriage bill proposed by the government and seen by many Moslems as a further move to secularize the state.

Labor Strife Likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organized labor ended a brief flirtation with President Nixon and threatened a new surge of union militancy in 1974 contract negotiations following a year of peaceful restraint in the United States.

The storm signals already were flying as 1973 drew to a close, with a sudden rash of strikes and labor and government officials predicting a stronger push for bigger wage settlements to offset rising living costs.

Still, there was hope that 1973's surprise record of labor peace would last into the new year.

But with inflation not yet under control, the Nixon administration was braced for a new round of settlements that could give still another spin to a wage-price spiral as the economy cools.

A similar threat of big wage pacts failed to materialize in 1971 despite one of the heaviest bargaining agendas since the Second World War.

Contracts affecting nearly five million workers fell neatly into place with little labor strife—first the apparel industry, then the railroad, electrical, rubber, trucking and auto industries. Bigger fringe benefits helped make up for smaller wage rises.

Time lost to strikes during the first nine months of the year was the lowest for the period in nine years. Increases in wages and benefits in major contracts averaged 6.3 per cent over the life of the contracts, in line with government guidelines.

The nation's unemployment rate fell below five per cent of the work force for the first time in three years. But the decline may be short-lived, with dire predictions of it climbing perhaps as high as eight per cent as a result of the energy crisis.

Experts were puzzled over labor's restraint at the bargaining table, particularly with the annual rate of inflation near year-end running over seven per cent, compared to 3.4 per cent in 1972.

Controls were credited for the most part with keeping the lid on wages.

Car Runs on Battery, Engine as Auxiliary

MIDDLEBURY, Conn. (AP) — Dedo Weigert Mitvidi of E. Robert Horwinski's compact car sounds normal one day but makes no noise while running the next day.

He explained it to run up to a point on noiseless battery power and shift to gasoline power when the batteries run down.

Horwinski, General Dynamics' former chief of European operations, conceived the hybrid car as an answer to the range limitations of a solely electrical vehicle.

While discussing it during a two-day symposium at the University of Bridgeport, he explained how it would work.

"You're stopped at a traffic light in the city. Nothing is running. You push down and you drive away on electricity. Then you get out on the road and as soon as the batteries are half discharged the gasoline engine starts automatically."

Horwinski has designed his car so that any unneeded power developed by the engine is converted to electricity and stored in the batteries.

Batteries occupy the place where the transmission is usually located and power from them and the gas engine is fed straight to the drive wheels.

While the basic Chevelle car he uses still contains the original 165-horsepower engine, he wants to replace it with a smaller one, such as a three-cylinder type used in a French compact.

The smaller engine, he said, works constantly at optimum speed, providing maximum power with minimum pollution.

When the car is stopped outdoors, the engine can be kept running to recharge the batteries. In the garage the batteries can be plugged into an electrical supply for recharging.

The maximum speed and range of the car under electrical power are 35 m.p.h. for one hour.

Powered by the small gas engine, the car can call on its electrical supply if needed for a hill or passing.

Another device that Horwinski created can convert braking power on downhill runs to electrical power for the batteries. He said that up to 85 per cent of the power used to go up hill can be recovered on the downgrade.

The inventor has filed for patents on the various devices that make up his hybrid car.

He said low-speed tests so far have been favorable, and he expects the same for top-speed operation, which he hopes will be about 90 m.p.

Calgary Museum Grows in Stature

EDMONTON (CP) — When Alberta's Social Credit government fell in 1971 after 36 years in power, officials of Calgary's Glenbow-Alberta Institute hurried to collect as many campaign souvenirs as they could find.

"The administration became history," Hugh Dempsey, director of history for the Glenbow, said in an interview. "We recognize that history is ongoing . . . not dusty, impersonal figures of the past, but a lived, vibrant sort of thing."

The Glenbow's 25,000 pieces of ethnic materials, ranging from medicine bundles to potlatch bowls, its 25,000 volumes and nearly 100,000 photographs on Western Canada history have led Glenbow officials to predict the institute will be one of the top-ranked museums in the world within 10 years.

But just as important as the collections soon to be housed in a new $9.7-million building are the Glenbow's programs, to arouse interest in western history among those who may never enter the museum.

The Glenbow's publishing program recently culminated in the release of its first hardcover book, an account of the first years of the North-West Mounted Police by William Parker, one of the force's originals.

Parker, an Englishman, wrote his reminiscences in the 1940s but they were not then published. The manuscripts and letters were acquired by the Glenbow, which subsequently arranged with Hurtig Publishers of Edmonton to publish an edited version.

The book, (308 pages, $7.95) one of two existing accounts of early police life by non-officers, provides an earthy and often amusing view into Parker's daily encounters with the personalities, historical episodes and terrain of the Canadian west.

Another outreach program of the Glenbow distributes artifact kits, such as an Eskimo life kit containing mukluks, a fish spear, a child's bone-and-pin game and snow goggles carved of bone.

This program, which "gives children a sense of history by letting them hold the actual artifacts," is being studied by several other Canadian museums, said Mr. Dempsey.

A Glenbow film on the Blackfoot sun dance was called the finest document available on an Indian religious ceremony by the Smithsonian Institution.

Impetus for the hour-long color film came from the Blackfoot 60 miles east of Calgary who were afraid the ritualistic ceremony would die out.

The Blackfoot were promised that the film would never be used commercially, and it is available to North American Indians free of charge.

Another film has been made on the prehistoric method of making Blackfoot pottery, said Mr. Dempsey, whose wife is a Blood Indian of the Blackfoot confederacy.

The Glenbow has established two museum mobiles—large trailers containing displays on the RCMP and Indian religion—one of which has spent the last four or five months north of Edmonton.

In addition, the Glenbow publishes a bi-monthly magazine in which every other issue features an Alberta Indian tribe. This information is needed not only by the schools, but by the tribes themselves seeking to preserve their cultures.

The Glenbow foundation was formed in 1955 by the family of Eric Harvie, an Ontario native who made a fortune in Alberta oil. In 1966 the family gave the foundation and its assets, estimated at $8 million, to the province of Alberta as a precentennial gift.

The institute now is run by a board of governors including three representatives of the Harvie family, three government officials and three members of the public.

The Glenbow is unlike many other historical institutions which are provincial government agencies, said Mr. Dempsey. It is independent and can go in the direction its board decides, Mr. Dempsey said.

Mr. Dempsey, a native Albertan who was editor of the old Edmonton Bulletin and worked for the provincial government's publicity bureau before joining the Glenbow in 1966, said that "during the last few years people have begun to take a more human approach to history."

"Young people see things of the past as interesting, significant and relevant . . . they see sequences of events."

Job-hungry Indians Risk Perils at Sea

BOMBAY (CP) — The trade ries are far higher than in Indian migrants, an Indian dia.

newspapers call it, has reached grim dimensions.

Hundreds of job-seeking Indians proceed to Arab sheikhdoms in the Middle East every month without valid travel documents. A powerful underground transport agency carries them in motor launches and even in primitive dhows.

There is a big demand for qualified Indian engineers, accountants, cooks and teachers in the sheikhdoms where salaBut it is believed that one in six illegal migrants never reach their destination, finding watery graves in the shark-infested Arabian Sea.

Recently, 160 Indian immigrants to the Persian Gulf were drowned when the motor launch in which they were packed caught fire and sank off the sheikhdom of Dubai.

One report in the Indian press said nearly 500 migrants were drowned last year.

Most of the Indians trying to go to the Persian Gulf are from the southern province of Kerala where there is a depressing combination of education and unemployment.

Kerala has the highest literacy rate in India. It is an area where bus conductors and tailors are university graduates. But the administration in the province has been unable to find jobs for the educated unemployed.

The Arab sheikhdoms have been wooing the Keralans for long time. They find the Indians hard working, loyal and disciplined. But because of the difficulty of getting regular passports and the high cost of air travel many migrants prefer the hazards of illegal entry.

A big racket in transporting the illegal migrants to the sheikhdoms has sprung up. It consists of Arabs and Indians and, one report said, several Westerners.

A report in the Bombay Free Press Jjurnal alleges that the 160 Indians who were drowned recently were deported by the Dubai authorities without ascertaining the seaworthiness of the launch intended to take them to Bombay.

The Indians, who had landed at a secret place along the Dubai coast, were caught by the police.

Many Indians and Pakistanis are in jail in the Persian Gulf sheikhdoms on charges of entering without proper travel documents.

Indian government officials say they have repeatedly warned about the dangers of illegal migration.

As one official in Bombay put it: "The lure of attractive jobs in the Persian Gulf appears to be irresistible. Even women are prepared to brave the perilous journey across the Arabian Sea."

Engineer Expects Steam to Be Back

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP) — Although it's been half a century since the last steam tractor was built, Coy Thomas McLennan sees the steam engine as a thing of the future, not the past.

"There's no doubt about it—steam will come back," says the 53-year-old former locomotive engineer. "If there's a shortage of gas, I could get steam and then fuel will probably be atomic."

His home, just outside of this central British Columbia city, sits in the middle of a yard cluttered with the memorabilia of steam. Giant wheels, axles and other parts lie strewn about.

His hobby of collecting and restoring steam tractors and his knowledge of where spare parts can be found has led people from all over Canada and the U.S. to get in touch with him.

Mr. McLennan owns seven steam tractors, three of them in operating condition, and knows the problems of finding parts for the tractors which were a familiar part of the landscape on farms from 1890 to 1922.

"You can't just go to a dealership and order," he said, explaining that steam hobbyists rely on the grapevine and publications like Iron Man magazine to get parts.

He said there are a number of contributing factors responsible for the decline of the steam tractor. One of the biggest is the high cost of steel. Steel tubing that used to cost 20 cents a foot when the engines were first built now costs $1.50.

The manpower to stoke the fire box, maintain the boiler and haul water and fuel also makes operating the machines impractical.

Still, even though he was born two years after the last steam tractor was built, he has worked with steam engines most of his life. About 15 of his 53 years with Canadian National Railways were spent as a locomotive engineer on steam-powered trains.

He tells the story of a young man who once drove past his house in a pickup truck, saw two huge steam tractor wheels sitting in the yard and asked if they were for sale.

"Son, if you can get those wheels out of here, you can have them," he said and watched the youth struggle to move them before giving up. They weighed 5,000 pounds each.

"I never laughed at him," Mr. McLennan said, "because that's how I got started." At the age of 15 he had become interested in steam engines while at a sawmill. While passing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway yard he asked a railway man the price of a small work locomotive in the yard.

"He said, 'Son, if you can get your feet off the ground long enough to get out of here, it's all yours.'"

News Leakers Get Protection

WASHINGTON (CP) — "Spokesman" inhaled deeply and lassoed his bourbon and branch water with a ring of heavy, blue-grey smoke.

"I have been promoted," he told his luncheon guests. "No longer may you refer to me as 'spokesman.' As of Wednesday, I move up to 'source.'"

In the wonderful world of Washington, it was an announcement of no small moment.

As in most areas of endeavor, one possesses sets of an entire string of promotions.

Thus, with "spokesman" moving up to "source," "source" had become "usually reliable source" and "usually" become "reliable source."

There was a general feeling of ease among the various sources around the table. Major news organizations had just agreed—in principle—on a bill to protect reporters against forced disclosure of confidential information.

More to the point, such a bill would provide that no reporter could be required to name the as source of confidential information except in the most extreme circumstances.

Washington is one of the most incestuous cities in the world. As a general rule, only if the news disclosed is good news will the source of the information agree to use of his name. It's a situation harking back to the days when it was common to put to death the bearer of bad tidings.

In this image-conscious and sensitive area, it sometimes seems that there is less preoccupation with who killed Cock Robin than there is with who leaked the grand jury testimony before The Sparrow could be indicted.

But back to the luncheon. Even the new name for the proposed bill found favor among the diners. Originally called the Newsmen's Privilege Act, now it is called the News Source and Information Protection Bill.

Particularly happy with this aspect were "official" and "observer," who are outside the normal information channels—sort of free-lance spokesmen, sources, usually-reliables and reliable. They are, generically, closer to "diplomat" or "diplomatic source" or "diplomatic observer"

"Source," not "spokesman," sprang for another round for his colleagues—those anonymous sources who had leaked such illustrious stories in the last year as the Watergate cover-up, Spiro Agnew's legal difficulties, the milk-price-support caper and the fact that there will be no restrooms in the new subway.

But there was one empty chair. And in front of it stood a card, turned down. None of the celebrants even glanced that way.

The place was set for "unimpeachable source." He hasn't been heard from lately.

Canadian Airlines Up Fares 10 Pct.

OTTAWA (CP) — Air Canada and CP Air announced today new domestic fare increases averaging 10.5 per cent with economy ticket prices rising between $2 and $18 depending on route length.

Thenew fares were filed with the Canadian transport commission and will take effect Feb. 24, barring intervention by the commission.

and free as many seats as possible.

The two airlines blamed rising fuel and other operating costs for the increase, first on domestic routes since March 1, 1971.

They said in news releases that the price rise is below the cost rise the airlines have had to face since the last fare increases.

The airlines said that economy fares for trips of more than 500 miles generally will increase by less than nine per cent.

Higher percentage increases will apply to flights of less than 500 miles with actual price increases being as much as $5. Rates are based on a standard travelling charge of $15 a ticket plus mileage charges which decrease with distance travelled.

Discounts for both short and long-haul travel at off-peak periods will remain at 20 per cent of the normal economy rate.

The airlines allempt to encourage travel within the country and to divert some traffic to off-peak periods through the discount rates, they said.

The aim was to balance passenger loads, hold down costs and free as many seats as possible for busy periods.

Fares for youths, senior citizens, families and groups are being raised. The airlines said these groups now use the discount rates

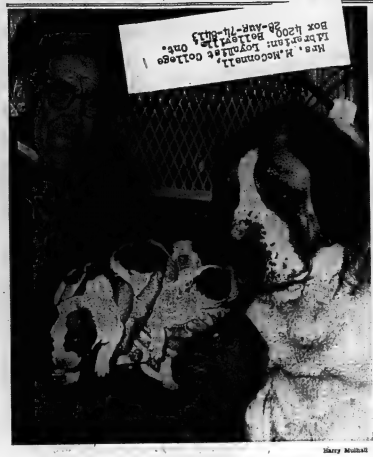
The senior citizens' discount rate will be reduced to 10 per cent from 20 per cent. The standby youth fare discount rate will be reduced to 20 per cent from 40 per cent.

The discounts are based on the normal economy rate.

With the family plan, after the head pays the normal economy fare, his spouse will get a 11-per-cent discount rather than the present 25 per cent.

Also under the family plan, additional dependents will get 11-per-cent discounts rather than the present 33 1-3 per cent.

Children between two and 11 will get 33 1-3-per-cent reductions compared to 50 per cent currently



Discounts for groups of 15 or more passengers will be reduced to 10 per cent from the present 20 per cent.

The gap between economy and first-class rates will widen "in recognition of the costs incurred in providing this premium service," the airlines said. First-class rates will be 45 per cent higher than economy-class fares rather than the 33-per-cent difference now. The airlines said that jet fuel prices jumped to an average of 21 cents a gallon in January from an average 17.7 cents last January.

Some proposed economy fares with current rates in brackets: Montreal-Vancouver, $142 ($131); Montreal-Winnipeg, $81 ($77); Montreal-Toronto, $31 ($30); and Montreal-Ottawa, $16 ($14).

The formula for the economy fares is a basic $15 board charge plus 6.1 cents a mile for the first 500 miles, 5.7 cents for the second 500 miles, 5.45 cents for the third 500 miles and 5.15 cents for all additional miles.

No fare is to be increased by more than 15.8 per cent.

Monopoly Exists

K.C. Irving's Purchases Of Papers Held Illegal

BATHURST, N.B. (CP) — The acquisition by K. C. Irving interests of all English-language daily newspapers in New Brunswick was illegal, a provincial supreme court judge ruled Thursday, "even although it may not appear to have actually produced any result detrimental to the public interest."

Mr. Justice Albany M. Rothstead of Moncton convicted K. C. Irving Ltd. on four charges of setting up newspaper monopolies, combines or mergers contrary to the Combines Investigation Act. It was the first such case in Canadian legal history.

Three subsidiary companies actually publishing the five papers also were found guilty— New Brunswick Publishing Co. Ltd. of Saint John, N.B., on three counts and Moncton Publishing Co. Ltd. and University Press of New Brunswick Ltd. in Fredericton on one count each.

March 12 has been set as a tentative date for sentencing. The federal act has no limits on the size of the fine the judge may impose.

Defence lawyer Donald Gillis said a decision on whether to appeal the convictions is "unlikely before sentences are handed down.

Judge Robichaud accepted the fact that the papers, owned by millionaire New Brunswick industrialist K. C. Irving, have complete editorial autonomy over their papers—the Saint John Telegraph-Journal and Times - Globe, the Moncton Times and Transcript and the Fredericton Gleaner.

But he said the cornerstone of Canadian combines law seems to be the "recognized right of the public to the benefit of free competition."

Trial evidence showed that acquisition of "the smallest newspaper chain in the country" began in 1944 when K. C. Irving Ltd. obtained all shares of New Brunswick Publishing Co. In 1946, the latter company acquired Moncton Publishing Co. In 1968, K. C. Irving Ltd. obtained complete ownership of University Press in Fredericton.

A combines investigation was authorized in 1969, charges lasting three months took place in Fredericton and Moncton in 1972.

In June, 1972, before the trial took place, the Irving papers announced a re-arrangement of ownership involving K. C. Irving's three sons. John Irving said he had acquired sole ownership of the Moncton and Fredericton papers, leaving the Saint John papers under control of his brothers, James and Arthur.

In Thursday's verdict Judge Robichaud found all four companies guilty of forming a newspaper monopoly in the 1960-71 period and K. C. Irving Ltd. guilty of being party or privy to a merger against the public interest.

K. C. Irving Ltd. and New Brunswick Publishing Co. were found guilty on two additional counts of forming or operating a combine in 1948-60. University Press was acquitted on these two charges, the judge noting the Fredericton company did not come under Irving control until 1968.

Combines officers seized about 3,882 documents during searches of company offices, trial records showed.

At one point in the trial Mr. Gillis estimated the cost of the proceedings to all parties involved as more than $500,000. A government return tabled in the Commons at Ottawa in February last year put the federal government's legal costs alone to that time at more than $78,000.

Israel Steps Up Pullback at Suez

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Israeli army accelerated its withdrawal from the west bank of the Suez canal today.

Egypt was also scheduled to begin moving some of its troops to reduce its forces on the east side of the waterway, but there was no confirmation that this movement started on schedule.

The Israeli withdrawal began ahead of time Wednesday. The military command in Tel Aviv refused to disclose details of the movement today, and Defence Minister Moshe Dayan refused to let reporters from Israel observe it.

But spokesmen confirmed that the troop movement was going ahead in accordance with the final disengagement agreement signed by the Israeli and Egyptian chiefs of staff at Kilometre 101 west of the canal Thursday.

Military sources in Tel Aviv said all Israeli troops will probably be out of the city of Suez, at the southern end of the canal, by Monday.

The sources said the Egyptians will probably regain full possession of Suez by noon Monday, and the bulk of the Egyptian 3rd Army can start moving across from the east bank where it has been trapped since the October war ended.

Under the disengagement agreement, the United Nations peacekeeping force is to take control of territory evacuated by the Israelis for at least six hours before handing it over to the Egyptians.

Fortune Teller Right, Body Is Found in Well

MITCHELL, Ont. (CP) — The body of Angus McDougall Tuer, 32, who was reported missing since Dec. 9, was found Thursday in a well near his farm with a chain around the neck and attached to "a weighted object," provincial police Inspector Dennis Alsop said Thursday.

Insp. Alsop said searchers went to the well after they heard that a fortune teller had predicted Mr. Tuer's body would be found "covered and deep down in the ground near his home."

Vera McNichol of nearby Milverton, who says she is a fortune teller, said a retired policeman had visited her and asked her if she could help find the man.

She said she told the retired policeman where he was and that she felt Mr. Tuer "had died and did not die wilfully."

Insp. Alsop said in a news conference Thursday that police suspect foul play, but he did not elaborate. He said the body had been in the well "for some considerable time"

The body was taken to the Centre for Forensic Science in Toronto and results of a post-mortem are expected to be released today.

3-day Work Week Stays in Britain

LONDON (CP) — The British government announced today that the three-day work week is to be maintained.

Energy Minister Patrick Jenkin told the House of Commons that the threat of an all-out strike by Britain's 270,000 coal miners has ruled out government hopes of a significant relaxation of restrictions.

The announcement followed Thursday's decision by the miners' executive to call for a strike vote among the miners. Their leaders expressed confidence that the vote will show a majority for a strike.

Jenkin said that because of the further threat to coal supplies implicit in the decision by the miners' leaders, the government believes it would be imprudent to ease the three-day working week.

But one change will be introduced, he said. Starting next week, those now using electricity supplies on Thursday to Saturday will work Wednesday to Friday, thus obviating the need for Saturday working.

Some British companies have found working on Saturday irksome, partly because of the difficulties encountered by working wives with children to look after.

Post Declares Nixon Met Hughes Secretly

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The Post says President Nixon met secretly last May with an aide of multi-millionaire Howard Hughes while governments were investigating a $100,000 Nixon campaign contribution from the Hughes organization.

The newspaper also says that Senate and federal investigators have uncovered evidence suggesting the $100,000 contribution was tied to a Justice department anti-trust ruling favorable to Hughes.

It said Senate investigators recently learned that John Mitchell when he was campaign general overruled lawyers in the justice department's anti-trust division and approved Hughes's proposed acquisition of an additional gambling hotel in Las Vegas.

Nixon and the White House have said repeatedly that Nixon has never participated in any discussions of political contributions and had nothing to do with either the solicitation or the return of the $100,000 from Hughes.

The Post says the president's friend Bebe Rebozo arranged last May's meeting between the president and Hughes emissary Richard Danner, who had originally delivered the $100,000 to Rebozo.

The newspaper says Danner has testified that he rejected Rebozo's pleas last May to take back the $100,000 in cash and at

Potter Praised, Panned

TORONTO (CP) — Even his most vociferous critics say Ontario's casualty frank health minister, Dr. Richard Potter, is a mighty nice fellow.

But that doesn't stop them from counting the days until his political retirement or actively campaigning for his resignation.

Dr. Potter has no intention of obliging them.

"I'd like to stay here," he said. "I'll stay here as long as the premier (William Davis) wants me here, and I don't imagine he's thinking of kicking me out for a while."

At 58, Dr. Potter says he is just beginning to see the results of reforms he pressed for while an outspoken backbencher in the John Robarts government.

They include:

—The Progressive Conservative program under Dr. Potter has centred on several main points:

—Gutting the focus from hospital care, costing $40,000 a bed to build, $40 to $50 a day to run and relatively less expensive and more appropriate treatment centres such as nursing homes, community health centres and patient's homes.

—Establishing district health councils composed of a cross-section of the local community to plan and co-ordinate health delivery systems.

—Exploring the whole question of paying the medical profession to determine whether salaries and group budgets can replace the fee for service.

—Restraining cost by curtailing hospital expansion, setting budget ceilings for hospitals and phasing out 1,600 active-treatment beds or switching them to other uses.

"We have three problems." Dr. Potter said. "We have the profession—and they have to learn that this is an efficient and handy way to look after their patients. You have the patient who has been accustomed to going to hospital for the most minor conditions. And third, there is our own ministry staff who for 25 years have been working the present system."

"We've had to convince them that you have to disturb the status quo to have a reorganization, to shuffle things up and develop a whole new system. It hasn't been easy."

Donald Deacon, NDP leader Stephen Lewis said there is "an enormous power struggle" within the health ministry itself.

"I will really be astonished if Richard Potter survives the cabinet shuffle," he said.

His sentiments have been echoed by Liberal leader Robert Nixon, one of the few who harbor personal animosity toward the minister.

Just being health minister invites public and political criticism, said Robert Welch, provincial secretary for social development, whose policy field includes health.

Mr. Welch said it is a matter of the times and the job and not the man that is responsible for much of the criticism of Mr. Potter.

The NDP leader rejects Mr. Welch's argument.

"When a man doesn't perform well they always say, 'Well, that's a difficult ministry.' That's nonsense.

However, Dr. Morton Shulman, the NDP member from Toronto High Park, says the minister is doing a good job.

"I like Dick Potter," he said. "The things we were yelling about then (prior to the minister's appointment) are being corrected today.

"He's an incredibly bad politician but he's a good health minister," added Dr. Shulman.

The NDP has pressed the minister to integrate all health care facilities—it accept Dr. Potter has rejected for the most part.

"The truth about Dick Potter is that he's still hung up on the traditional view of delivering health services," said Mr. Lewis. "He's still looking at the old models, still keying on hospitals."

St. Bernard Produces Bargain Litter of Pups

They'd barely got a big St. Bernard nicely settled in Ontario Humane Society's Quinte shelter when suddenly there were nine more.

The St. Bernard was given the OHS for adoption by a Belleville-area man Tuesday.

It was already pregnant and pups were due in about two weeks.

Thursday morning OHS warden Clare O'Sullivan sensed something unexpected had happened.

In the dog's pen he found nine pups nestling up to the mid-belly of protective St. Bernard. He quickly installed a heat lamp to make things that more comfortable for the

Legal Aid Available Earlier

In an effort to speed up courtroom procedures at the provincial court, criminal division, on Victoria St., Belleville, area lawyers who serve as legal aid duty counsel will now be on hand one hour before court begins to consult with people who need their services.

In the past, the legal aid duty counsel arrived in court just before the court's 10 a.m. commencement time. Now, however, those people requiring legal aid assistance will be able to see the duty counsel at 9 a.m.

Crown Attorney Gleen Deline will continue his practice of being in his provincial court office at 9 a.m.

Under the province's Legal Aid Plan, people appearing before the courts who lack the financial resources to hire their own lawyer, are able to obtain legal assistance from the duty counsel. The duty counsel also assists people in filling out a legal aid application whereby they can obtain the services of the lawyer of their choice.

$2,000 Stolen In Break-in

Belleville police are investigating the theft of $2,000 from an Albert Street home sometime between 6:30 and 7:29 p.m. last night.

Police Chief Douglas Crosbie said today that thieves broke into a home at 240 Albert Street early in the evening and stole the cash from a purse.

Entry was gained to the home by breaking a pane of glass in a back door.

Chief Crosbie has expressed concern over the increasing number of break-ins in the East Hill area in recent weeks. Most of the break-ins that have been reported occur during the early evening hours when there are many people on the streets and this makes the policeman's job of apprehending the break-in artists that much more difficult, he said.

Hydro Outlines Alternatives

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON—Municipal officials from the Quinte area met Thursday night with with Ontario Hydro spokesmen to examine various methods of providing additional facilities to supply increasing power demands in Prince Edward County.

Next month a series of public meetings will be held to review and supplement the study.

Prince Edward County now is supplied by three wood pole lines operating at 44,000 volts.

Ontario Hydro stresses that no final decisions concerning routes or voltages for an increased power supply have been made.

A Hydro study team has identified several broad corridors through which lines operating at 44,000 volts, 115,000 volts or 230,000 volts could be routed.

At each of these voltage levels there are several alternatives under consideration.

New Line Might be Needed

A third method would be connection by two circuits on one wood pole line on a right-of-way about 50 feet wide within a specified corridor.

It is noted that all 115,000 volt transmission lines would have to originate at, or near Sedney or Belleville transformer stations.

If two 115,000 circuits were built now, a third and perhaps a fourth might be required in approximately 25 to 30 years.

At the 230,000 level a new transformer station near Picton could be connected to the mainland network by one steel tower line from the Lennor Generating Station or a point along a planned transmission line to be constructed between Lennox and Napanee.

Consideration of the 220,000-volt tower line shows that a cross-country right of way about 90 feet wide would be required in one of the corridors.

One 230,000-volt tower line would indefinitely meet Prince Edward's power requirements.

A Hydro spokesman said that his study team used essentially an environmental approach to select alternate corridors for the power lines.

Among the considerations were linear restrictions, built-up and future land use, natural systems, agriculture, natural resources and visual analysis.

Norman Manning, Hydro public relations officer said that 3,000 residents in the study area will receive literature concerning power supply alternatives.

"A Myriad" of Routes

Newspaper advertisements also will appear in connection with a series of public meetings that will begin Feb. 12 at Kente School in Ameliasburgh.

Those will be sent to interested persons unable to attend the meetings to permit them to detail any constraints they feel should be used.

Another hydro spokesman said in an interview last night that initially a 230,000 volt line was favored for Prince Edward. He emphasized that following a study begun last summer equal consideration is now extended to 44,000-volt and 115,000-volt lines.

He observed that there is a "myriad of cross-country routes."

The Ontario Hydro's original proposal for a high voltage line across Haywards Long Beach was scrapped last summer to "visual pollution."

For a 44,000 voltage level wood pole lines originating at Sidney, Belleville and Napanee transformers stations could be built along right of way on certain corridors or built along road allowances as shown on Ontario Hydro map.

By 1975 two new lines would be required. It is probable that additional lines would be needed in 1981, 1985, 1988 and every two or three years afterward.

At the 115,000-volt level a transformer station would be built in Prince Edward near Picton and connected with the Ontario Hydro's mainland transmission network in one of three ways.

Connection could be made by two separate circuits, each on a wood pole line, or following separate road allowances from routes selected from specified alternatives.

Also, two circuits on one wide right of way about 70 feet wide within a specified corridor could be used for connective purposes. New Line)

One of the indications of a daylong session in Belleville Thursday that involved the Bay of Quinte Mohawks in discussions with Ontario Indian affairs department officials.

The Mohawks seem intent on settling the Shannonville lease issue — that involves both them and about a score of residents in the Highway 2 hamlet - - in an eccentric land relationship dating from more arbitrary colonial times.

The document legalized transfer of 500 acres of Mohawk's Tyendinaga Reserve land for 999 years to a mill owner who subsequently subleased smaller acreages as more settlers arrived. Only rental during the term of the lease was to be 20 barrels of flour paid by the owner of the original mill site.

Subleases, worn with age are often the only legal documents of land title held.

Pressure is rectify what is an obvious anachronism in modern lines has been mounting in recent years. Now the Mohawk Council elected in Tuesday's election will find William Brant, seems to have set a priority on settlement of the issue.

The chief says its early resolution is needed in both fairness to the Mohawks and their Shannonville neighbors.

"The general consensus of the council is get it resolved as quickly as possible," said the chief.

He said he was "quite hopeful" some agreement could be reached before the end of the year.

"At least we will come to terms one way or the other. If we don't I don't think it will be our fault. We want to settled quickly."

Object of yesterday's meeting at the Sun Valley Motor Inn was a team of federal regional officials, led by Howard Rodine, regional Indian affairs director for Toronto, was to familiarize the new council with what has transpired on the lease situation in recent times. Chief Brant said another meeting has already been scheduled for February 14 with representatives from the department's national offices in Ottawa.

"We're a new council and it takes a little time to familiarize ourselves with what the negotiations have been in the past before we can take more positive steps", said Chief Brant.

Firemen Seek More Pay

TRENTON—Town council will meet within the month to discuss wage and fringe benefit demands of Trenton's 18 firefighters.

A town negotiating committee composed of treasurer Brian Fagan and acting commissioner of works Arie Hoornweg, met with firefighters' negotiating committee Jan. 16 to discuss "15 requests for changes."

Mr. Fagan said all requests have been discussed and council should be sitting down in a session soon to deliberate the situation.

Majority of requests are said to involve working benefits with only one request pertaining to wages.

Mr. Fagan said the wage requests applied for an across-the-board raise. Asked what increase was involved, Mr. Fagan declined specifics but said it was a combination pay increase and cost-of-living increase.

Dennis Smith, chairman of the fire fighters' committee also declined to comment what the union was seeking. He said "we're in a feeling-out stage right now." The town budgeted $277,000 for firemen's union pay roll last year.

Mr. Fagan said the town committee would be taking results of the discussions back to council "for its comments and direction," at the soonest caucus session.

The town will also be sitting down with office staff and outside workers within the month for their contract bargaining.

This will affect some 32 public employees. Requests have been made, but as yet no meeting has been held.

Mr. Fagan said both groups members of CUPE - - will be dealt with individually.

Firefighters Off to College

TRENTON — Two Trenton firefighters will attend the Fire College in Gravenhurst this summer on professional development courses.

Dennis Smith will be the first to leave on May 13 followed July 8 by Bus DeMille.

Both are attending eight week courses.

PUC May Refuse Council Request on Project Delays

TRENTON—Town council has requested that major water system modifications be delayed for two more summers — a request that will apparently be turned down by the Public Utilities Commission.

The commission in its capital budget published Thursday, proposals to the town requested $350,000 in debenturing for construction of a 16-inch diameter water main. This main would be used to transport treated water from the east bank of the river to the downtown section and the west bank.

Another $80,000 worth of debentures have been requested for modification to the east bank filtration plant that would double its 2.5 million gallons a day output, allow for additional pumps to circulate the water and increase the quality of taste.

The town - in a bid to save money on the reconstruction and re-routing of Highway 33 — requested PUC to hold construction until 1975.

The town's thinking that the street need only be torn up once if road-widening and water lines were completed simultaneously.

Doug Manlow, PUC manager — talks with consultants, told the commission "we'd be rather hard-pressed to get through two more peak demand seasons waiting for town work."

The proposal discussed Thursday involves bringing a main across the river and requiring easements across senior government and private properties.

The new main would hook up with the existing west bank water network mixing its waters with spring water from Lake Ontario there.

Liberals Meet

TRENTON — The Prince Edward Hastings Liberal Association will hold its annual meeting and election of officers tonight in Batawa.

The meeting will be held in the Batawa recreation centre beginning at 8 p.m.

Grants Douuble

TORONTO (CP) — Research grants awarded by the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada for 1974-75 are more than double previous annual levels, says society president Peter Lowry. An additional $200,000 will have been raised over last year's figure to enable further research into multiple sclerosis and rehabilitation programs.

New Line Might be Needed

Consideration of the 220,000-volt tower line shows that a cross-country right of way about 90 feet wide would be required in one of the corridors.

No Building New Lines For at Least a Year

PICTON—Robert Murray, senior right-of-way planning engineer for Ontario Hydro, has predicted it will be at least another year before construction can begin on additional power lines to Prince Edward.

Mr. Murray told municipal officials here last night that, hopefully there will be public input concerning the alternate corridors proposed by Hydro.

He said that the report now under preparation "ultimately will go to the government" although it does not have, at present, a specific environmental review board.

It is expected that the report will be completed by the end of August, 1974.

Trenton PUC Asking $750,000 Capital Funds

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

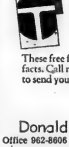
TRENTON — The Public Utilities Commission here has requested only slightly less than $750,000 for capital works this year.

Debentures must be applied for by the town and must receive provincial approval. The PUC proposal will be considered by council when the town's capital budget is assessed sometime in the coming month.

Water works account for the majority of proposed debenturing, with projects estimated at $443,000.

These projects are filter plant improvements ($60,000), construction of watermain to feed filtered water to the west bank of the Trent River ($350,000), water main repairs ($28,600) and recharge pond cleaning ($5,00).

Electrical plans: Construction of substation ($115,000); 440,000-volt circuit for east-side industrial park ($30,000); Front Street relocation ($20,000); new equipment ($10,000); extension of high voltage circuit from Dixon Drive for sewage treatment plant and for new shopping mall ($5,000); power transformation for the new shopping mall ($63,000).



There was no clear answer why the general consumer is paying for shopping plaza electrical needs or whether they would have to pay for them at all.

Commission members and manager Doug Manlow explained the mall isn't just one customer but a group. Commissioner Bailey for a mall is the same as for subdivision.

To the commission, mall owners were not in the same position as an industrialist who must pay for an equivalent service.

A Salmon Industry?

Just as cheese has long been associated with the Belleville and Quinte area there is a potential major industry on our door step if we will but grasp the opportunity and take the necessary action.

City alderman Stu Meeks is one who believes that this fishing industry is one that can be developed here and that no time should be wasted in bringing it to fruition.

There are obstacles of course: Money for one, although some funds are available. The pollution factor is another.

But Mr. Meeks is not deterred and he is asking for action at both the municipal and citizen level — the green light from council and the active participation of volunteers — in giving the first hesitant appearance of salmon in the bay for some time a chance.

The story goes back five or six years to a joint Canadian - U.S. project to introduce salmon into Lake Ontario waters.

Then last fall salmon began appearing in considerable numbers in The Narrows just this side of Baker Island between Belleville and Trenton, a phenomenon that had not occurred for 40 years.

With the prospect of this becoming a major industry Mr. Meeks is proposing a tree-planting program throughout the Moira river watershed, as a means of creating shade, cooler water conditions, and encouraging moisture retention along the river.

In addition he is advocating a dredging program at the mouth of the Moira — once a major spawning bed — and around Zwick's Island. At present silt and the accumulation of the years, from one municipal project after another, and chemicals, are a serious deterrent, militating as they do against the fish spawning successfully. The creation of artificial spawning beds is another requirement.

Interested parties to the development of this industry, in addition to the community, are the Ministry of Natural Resources, the Ministry of the Environment (Mr. Meeks recently suggested to Environment Minister James Auld the need for closer co-operation with Natural Resources to get such programs going), and the Moira River Conservation Authority. The latter body, says Mr. Meeks, has its own tree-planting programs but he says much more extensive planting is needed.

The Belleville alderman, who knows something of the value of volunteer activity from his own efforts in behalf of harbor facilities, is hoping to enlist the help of school and college (such as Loyalist) groups, and perhaps the rod and gun people, in the river and water restriction work.

With salmon the price it is these days; Mr. Meeks believes there is nothing to lose. His tree-planting proposal goes before the next meeting of council and he is looking for matching enthusiasm to his own from citizen groups.

As the alderman says: why go to B.C. when we could have it all on our own doorstep?

Pickerel Gone

In discussing what can be done to revitalize fishing in the Bay of Quinte Ald. Meeks recalled that 15 years ago, during the pickerel run, "you could walk from boat to boat."

Game wardens stood guard against poachers. Over the years however the fish and the fishing declined. The game wardens were no longer in evidence either.

This is a measure of the deterioration of the bay and of the challenge facing us.

Slow Boats!

A food note — and it has been mentioned before by Women's Editor Sharon Airhart — why don't the supermarkets make their Express outlets what they are supposed to be? What with cheques being cashed, and shoppers with more than the stipulated number of items, Express outlets are more like slow boats to China.

Turks and Caicos May Be Suspect Too

Caribbean Welcome-Mat Is Less in Evidence These Days

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — Sure, especially in these cold and dull Winter days, the idea of "Caribbean Canada," with its warm sun and golden talcum beaches, sounds seductive.

That is what Max Saltsman, the imaginative New Democratic MP from Ontario's Waterloo-Cambridge -and his legislative partner, Heath Macquarrie, Conservative MP from Prince Edward Island's Hillsborough, call it, "Caribbean Canada," in their bill for a "political association"—confederation, no less — with the Turks and Caicos Islands.

These are a string of tiny coral keys, area a bit more than 600 square miles, population about 5,000, southeast off the last of the Bahamas.

The Canadian section of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association has been down to scout the tropical territory and report that the governing council of the Turks and Caicos would like the islands to become Caribbean cousins of Nova Scotia, with which they have traded for scores of years.

Everything would seem "go" for Caribbean Canada: the palm-fringed beaches are 600 miles nearer than Victoria to Ottawa; and Saltsman-Macquarrie bill has been introduced and given a unanimously enthusiastic First Reading in the Commons; and the public reaction, to scan the heavy parliamentary mail, is gung-ho for fun-in-the-sun.

But ...

What?

Just this ... not so long ago, Heath Macquarrie, who is his party's External Affairs critic, later in Conservative Leader Stanfield's "shadow cabinet," himself had some doubts about those "Paradise Islands" scattered from Bimini down through the Bahamas, Puerto Rico, the Leewards and Windwards, Trinidad and Tobago, to Venezuela.

Broke Heath Macquarrie:

"A surging crowd rampages through Trinidad's capital of Port of Spain, and smashes the plate glass windows of Canadian shops.

"The Governor General of Canada is met by a group of hecklers as he enters the ground of the Trinidad campus of the University of the West Indies.

"The Attorney General of Jamaica, at a Commonwealth-Parliamentary conference, bitterly denounces our immigration policy as 'immoral' and describes Canadian aid as 'totally inadequate.'

"The Foreign Minister of Trinidad and Tobago characterizes the Canadian contribution to the Regional Development Bank as a mere drop in the ocean."

And, recounted Heath Macquarrie, there were other similar incidents.

They all, of course, involved the "official" side of Canadian life.

But what about the individual Canadian tourist who, getting down with a severe case of "the January Miserables," flies out of our winterland of slush and sniffle for a rum-punch cure where the warm blue-green waters lazily break in foamy whites on the fine powder sand?

Used to be no problem.

Anyone remember how it once was in those "good old days" when your wife did not need the traveller's cheque, but carried her checkout counter ... when the last of the new nearly extinct family doctors, the general practitioner, sometimes made house calls ... when you could buy a house without taking out a first mortgage on all the rest of the years of your life.

Then, when "shopping Caribbean," your only thoughts were how long the beach, warm the water, splendid the hotel, magnificent the groceries and bar ministrations, or how many yards of travellers' cheques.

Now, as viewed from the perspective of eleven journeys to the palmy promised land, there are far more urgent considerations.

How really welcome are you and your dollars? How hospitable is the island government? Do the natives resent the tourists? Is the blossom-scented air filled with a much-racial tension as warm sunshine? And can you go there without concern of being frusted, hassled, insulted, ignored, threatened or even robbed?

Recently, assassination of white officials and murder of white tourists have added a terrifying dimension to Paradise in the Caribbean and South Atlantic.

Whatever the existing social or racial inequities of provocation, what tourist wants to risk throwing away a treasured week or 10 days at ... resorts ... such as island where the welcome is as cold as the weather hot?

Perhaps before Heath Macquarrie and Max Saltzman become the new Fathers of Confederation, they should establish beyond all doubt that the Turks and Caicos, recently pearls in the coral necklace of the now-independent Bahamas, remain isolated from the infection of racism in the lands of the sea and sun.

"We're busy right now—could you come back when you're better?"

Minister Talks About Fuel Shortage

Macdonald Has Plans to Meet Energy Chief

The Canadian Press recently conducted lengthy interviews with Federal Energy Minister Donald Macdonald and Premier Lougheed of Alberta.

The following is an extract from the interview with Mr. Macdonald. This will be followed shortly by the interview with Premier Lougheed.

Energy Minister Macdonald

Q. Several figures have been quoted on potential shortages this winter in Eastern Canada. What is the hardest estimate you can make?

Macdonald: The interruption at the moment would be about 75,000 barrels a day and the down side, the worst we foresee, is a shortfall of about 200,000. The Arabs have cut production by 25 per cent and indicated they will go to 30 per cent . . . Being cautious and prudent I think we'd have to adhere to our original figures on shortages.

Q. The Shabeen refinery at Come-By-Chance, Nfld., has been a matter of controversy. The operators say it will be running soon and producing 100,000 barrels a day. You've questioned this statement.

Macdonald: It's obviously a difference of opinion among technical people. But it's not thought that it will be operating fully before the end of the first-quarter of 1974. It's possible the some products may be available in the meantime that could be used in Canada. We have to wait and see how much beta it will be.

Q. What is the long-range outlook for heating oil and gasoline supplies.

Macdonald: Normally, towards the end of winter, the refineries start contemplating the production of motor gasoline. Because of the pressure for heating oil this winter, I understand there will be some difficulty shifting over in the normal time frame. So there is a prospect for a gasoline shortage at the moment would be about 10,000 barrels a day and the down side, the worst we foresee, is a shortfall of about 200,000. The Arabs have cut production by 25 per cent and indicated they will go to 30 per cent . . . Being cautious and prudent I think we'd have to adhere to our original figures on shortages.

Q. The Shabeen refinery at Come-By-Chance, Nfld., has been a matter of controversy. The operators say it will be running soon and producing 100,000 barrels a day. You've questioned this statement.

Macdonald: It's obviously a difference of opinion among technical people. But it's not thought that it will be operating fully before the end of the first-quarter of 1974. It's possible the some products may be available in the meantime that could be used in Canada. We have to wait and see how much beta it will be.

Q. What is the long-range outlook for heating oil and gasoline supplies.

Macdonald: Normally, towards the end of winter, the refineries start contemplating the production of motor gasoline. Because of the pressure for heating oil this winter, I understand there will be some difficulty shifting over in the normal time frame. So there is a prospect for a gasoline shortage at the moment would be about: I haven't got an estimate on how much it will be.

Q: How long will it take for Canada to become self-sufficient in oil—1980?

Macdonald: It's going to take a long time in Canada. We, for economic reasons, we may decide not to replace all imported oil with oil from Western Canada. It also depends if the Atlantic offshore. If we bring in substantial supplies there or in the eastern Arctic, we'll be able to move toward self-sufficiency more quickly.

Q: At what point, with the development of nuclear power plants, does electricity become more economical than oil?

Macdonald: I think we're there. . . . Not just from a security standpoint but also from an economic standpoint. From a clear power is competitive.

Q: Does this endanger long-range development of the northern Alberta oil sands?

Macdonald: I don't think so. Electricity supplies a lot of our needs—light, heat and a lot of industrial power. But at the moment there is no real alternative to oil as a propulsive fuel for vehicles. . . . The long-range threat would be a substantial move away from gasoline engines to perhaps some kind of efficient electrical car.

Q: The energy debate has brought out some fundamental differences in viewpoint between Ottawa and Alberta. Is there a good working relationship generally with the provincet?

Macdonald: I think there has been . . . but there's a certain amount of political jockeying involved in the thing.

Q: Is it intended happen in a federal election campaign? Would you sell the federal viewpoint on how the country's resources should be used?

Macdonald: It depends on what part of the country you're in. Clearly, it could be sold in the consuming provinces. It would be rather difficult in Alberta.

Q: Oil Industry spokesmen say federal policy changes have made things so unattractive for the industry that exploration may decline seriously. Is this the case?

Macdonald: It's difficult to read that one. When the federal white paper on taxation came down a few years ago, there were widespread predictions that the Canadian oil industry would die and that everybody would emigrate. Well, that didn't happen. And now the president of the Canadian Oil Well Drillers Association is saying that 1974 looks like the best year ever. So there are conflicting statements; it remains to be seen. I think the latest predictions have to be regarded as a certain amount of corporate bluffing of the kind we had with the tax bill. There is a degree of posturing there.

Q: The government has made a number of fundamental policy changes that the industry obviously doesn't like. Can the oil companies ever again expect the sort of business climate they had in the past?

Macdonald: There are some new elements involved and new elements always change a situation. But I would anticipate that industry would continue to have an excellent basis for operation. . . . Government regulatory action in Canada has been very much less than in other parts of the world.

Q: The direction of Canadian energy policies affect our relations with other countries, particularly the United States. Any conflict here spill over into other areas such as the auto pact?

Macdonald: I regard our relations with the U.S. as not as bad at the moment. . . . There is a certain amount of friction on particular trading commodities. From northern consumers, for example, when we take action to protect oil supplies in the Canadian market. You have to sort this kind of friction out from the overall view that has been expressed by both governments—that we'll look after the national interests of each country but at the same time try to minimize the damage.

Q: Does the American aim of energy self-sufficiency by 1980 have a bearing on the proposed Mackenzie Valley natural gas pipeline.

Macdonald: I think it's very relevant. It will be seeing President Nixon's new energy leader, William Simon, in late January—the Summit meeting of their federal-provincial energy conference. One of the important questions is how, when they talk about being independent of any supplier, no matter how friendly, this relates to Canada. If they intend to be self-independence from Canada in this regard, we'll have to look at projects like the Mackenzie line and decide whether—financially—we would do it at this time. There has been a certain amount of speculation about the ability of the U.S. to attain that kind of independence by 1980.

Q: International oil prices have shot up drastically in recent months. Will they come down in the future?

Macdonald: We don't think so. If you were a policy maker in Venezuela or Saudi Arabia, you wouldn't see no reason to bring them down. But that's not to say we'll go up to the moon.

There is an upper level. If the industrialized states, particularly the U.S., are pressed too hard, the economic basis for using competitive fuels will open up. Also, if the U.S. carries on its drive for energy independence, it would restrict the ability of the oil-producing states to keep putting the price up.

Watergate Morass

Ford's Defence Role Coming Under Criticism in the U.S.

By GEORGE KITCHEN

NEW YORK (CP) — Vice-President Gerald Ford, perhaps because he was untarnished by political scandal, may be in danger of being picked into the Watergate mire.

Eighteen months after the event, the Watergate affair remains a top preoccupation in American political life. Scarcely a day goes by that the still-unfolding scandal does not get public attention.

Invariably eyes focus on President Nixon with questions turning on the extent to which the president may have been involved in the cover-up.

Many Republicans sighed with relief when Ford was sidelined into the vice-presidency. He added a pillar to a weakened White House and many politicians mulled over the possibility that if Nixon had to go, a man of some stature and dignity would be able to replace him.

But Ford rejected suggestions that he had presidential ambitions. His main effort seemed to be to defend Nixon against his attackers. Now his hometown newspaper, the Grand Rapids, Mich., Press, has urged Ford to "put some distance" between himself and Nixon on the Watergate issue.

The "agony" of the affair, the newspaper says, is being prolonged by "total loyalty and outright deceit of the White House."

This is a strong statement. The message to Ford is clear—Nixon is in political trouble and Ford should stop appearing to be an apologist.

Last week Ford accused "a few extreme partisans" of seeking to stretch out "the ordeal of Watergate for their own purposes." The disclosure came at a time that Ford has been borrowing the talents of Nixon's speechwriters.

The Michigan newspaper comment suggest that grievances may build up to have Ford reassess his commitments to Nixon. Ford has always been a team player. It is this Republican party role that may have convinced Nixon he can lean heavily on Ford.

Meanwhile the Watergate grand jury grows weary. Several of its members have had to quit because jury duty imperilled their earnings. But the job before the jury members continues to pile up. No one seems to know just where it will end.

The big current issue is the 18-minute gap on a key White House tape. White House records show that only three people had access to both the recorder and the tape—Nixon's confidential secretary, his aged assistant and the president himself. The White House has insisted that Nixon erased the tape. The FBI has been ordered to investigate. A jab and many take weeks or months and may produce no decisive conclusion.

The only public conviction that seems evident from opinion polls and published comment is that Nixon continues to be in deep political trouble. And despite all his defensive campaigns, including campaigning against public suspicion of Nixon's guilt has not been erased.

A Critical Look at Page 5

Editor
The Intelligencer

I would like to applaud your efforts to expand the forum aspects of your newspaper by the PAGE FIVE special in prominence each Saturday. I am sure that many readers will take advantage of this opportunity for airing the debatable points of a wide range of local issues. Pointedness generally has the potential of being a very interesting new feature.

Your first presentation of Point-Counterpoint fell far short of the "head-to-head debate" you are aiming for, and it was your editorial that was to blame in evaluating the Poste-Payne verbal confrontation as a stalemate. Payne's rhetoric scores a tick above zero. Expletive emotions, flamings, name-calling, mud-slinging and all other forms of emotive rhetoric do not qualify as rational rebuttals of (or challenges to) what is after any "head-to-head debate."

Mr. Payne's opponent handled the cardinal sin of debating the view-points and the actions of the opponents to support his own response to the question.

The Editor, I hope your readers do not get the impression that Mr. Payne's contribution to a debating style you will accept in the future.

J. M. ZAHACK

Editor's Note: Readers should be aware of the fact that Saturday's "Point-Counterpoint" feature on Page Five are never given access to the columnist's views. The feature is a "blind date" argument.

Energy Crisis

Buses Not the Answer

Editor
The Intelligencer

I would like to reply to Mr. Goodspeed's article on heating the energy crisis in the January 19, edition of the Intelligencer.

I can't imagine anything more inefficient, inconvenient and time-consuming than using the bus system for Saturday shopping — especially for the average family.

Firstly, there is the problem of contending with active children while waiting for a bus or busy street. This problem would be intensified when waiting for the bus after shopping when arms are full of parcels.

I am a single person with no one to look after except me when I go on my weekly shopping expedition I buy far more than I can comfortably carry or hold while waiting for a bus. Imagine the plight of a family with several children. They can't far more than you could ask them to hold on to at the bus stop. Imagine dozens of these families trying to store their bags, boxes and children on the bus altogether!

In order to use the bus system it is necessary for me to make at least three trips to the store per week so that I could comfortably carry my purchases home. That's 52 cents per trip multiplied by the average number of time. I think I'll stick to my car.

Slower Growth Predicted

Gloomy Turner Rejects Plea From Ontario for More Money

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Turner gave a gloomy view of the economy for 1974 and rejected an Ontario plea for more federal tax money Thursday at the annual federal-provincial finance ministers conference.

He said rising fuel prices will slow the growth of exports because foreign customers will not have the cash to ingreased demand. Consumer prices would continue to rise, and unemployment would diminish little if at all.

Added together there was any break in the economic bad weather ahead, he replied that "bad news is relative."

There still would be substantial economic growth and the federal taxes and spending are many others bit by high fuel bills and energy shortages.

Investment in domestic energy, including the proposed Montreal oil pipeline, would increase under the attraction of higher prices. He doubted that would offset the fall in export growth.

Ontario Treasurer John White said his province, and especially its municipalities, need more money to pay for the services they provide. He said payments that would normally flow to them as a result of higher royalties to Alberta after its oil prices are permitted to rise.

But Mr. Turner said Thursday he opposes windfall equalization just as he does windfall profits to the oil companies.

British Columbia Premier Dave Barrett called for a national public enquiry into the taxes paid-or not paid—by all resource industries. Mr. Turner rejected the proposal, but Ontario and Alberta expressed sympathy for the idea.

Pilots Prepare To Battle Feds

OTTAWA (CP) — The transport department and marine authorities across the country are in a struggle which observers here say the pilotage agencies are likely to lose.

Key issues in the dispute are maritime safety, uniformity of regulations in Canadian waters and the autonomy of pilotage authorities.

Pilotage authorities, which are Crown corporations, have broad powers to make their own regulations—too broad in the eyes of transport department officials.

They say some authorities have "thumbed their noses" at a government request for uniform regulations in Canadian waters. This has prompted Transport Minister Jean Marchand to order changes in some proposed regulations and to request a review of pilotage legislation.

Department sources say they favor tightening the minister's control over the authorities.

The Pilotage Act, which took effect Feb. 1, 1972, created four agencies—Atlantic, based at Halifax; Laurentian at Montreal; Great Lakes at Cornwall, Ont.; and Pacific at Vancouver. They develop and enforce regulations and set pilotage tariffs. They also are concerned with certifying and licensing pilots.

Union Employee Linked to Fire

TORONTO (CP) — A lathing union official, in testimony Thursday to the royal commission inquiry into violence in the construction industry, linked a former union employee to a fire at a construction firm five years ago.

Agostino Simone, business agent for Local 562 of the Lathers International Union, said that in 1968 an envelope was left at the union office for Bruno Zanini.

Mr. Zanini, hired by the union to help organize workers in the concrete-forming industry, told him the envelope contained $1,000, the witness said.

Mr. Simone said that three or four days after the envelope was left by George Orla there was a fire at the Leader Masonry and Forming Co. Ltd.

Mr. Orla had been identified in earlier testimony as a public relations man for Nicola DiLorenzo, a builder who had a group of companies.

When the Leader company office caught fire, Mr. Simone testified he said to Mr. Zanini: "You must be part of it."

Mr. Zanini "told me he was supposed to do something but when he got there they were in flames," the witness said in reply to questions by Raymond Charbonin, lawyer for Mr. Zanini.

Mr. Simone then testified, however, the payment from Mr. Orla was three or four days after the fire.

He said Mr. Zanini claimed the Council of Concrete Formling Unions was selling the fires.

In 1968 Local 562 and the Council were competing to sign up workers in the concrete forming workers but Local 562 got the majority because it had the support of Mr. DiLorenzo's companies.

In June, 1969 Mr. Zanini left Local 562, taking about 2,000 members to create his own concrete forming union.

Earlier this week, Inspector Bruno Drogo of the Ontario Provincial Police testified that between August, 1968 and March, 1969, there were nine major acts of arson or industrial sabotage at construction sites in southern Ontario, resulting in more than $750,000 damage.

"In each case the victim was a concrete-forming company opposed to Local 562," said the OPP witness.

Farm Vacations Ideal for Poor

WINNIPEG (CP) — Farm vacations are ideal for lower-income families because they are relatively priced and are the best deal around, a seminar was told Thursday.

Prof. Alfred Rankin of Laurentian University of Sudbury, Ont., said the seminar sponsored by the Manitoba Farm Vacations Association that the farmer who takes in guests is not doing it for the money but rather for the expanded social contacts.

"I think anyone who goes into this business to make the big buck has got to have rocks in his head unless he's going to run a resort-type operation," he said.

He said "culture shock" could result when the relatively free-thinking city kid is put with the more traditional and conservative rural people.

The only provinces not represented at the seminar is Newfoundland.

Everybody Tightens Belt Bravely When There's Yards to Tighten

LONDON (AP) — In Britain's darkest days, since its darkest hour, the natives are still going about their business by gaslight and more or less cheerfully coping. Especially the blind.

Lord Hesketh has suspended use of his helicopter for the duration, and so has Sir Hugh Fraser. The P. and O. liner Canberra, wending westward with 1,700 orphans of the storm, has shrunk the world and eliminated Canada, the Virgin Islands and part of the Indian Ocean from its world cruise to save fuel.

Bankers and brokers in the City, the financial district beyond St. Paul's, are concerned about an increase in office leprosy amid the Edwardian gloom of the gas lamps. Some of the more liberated birds are putting their heads under the bedclothes in search of the benighted knights of the water closet.

The Spirit of Dunkerque is abroad in the land once again. Soup are running about shouting "put out that light." The Electricity Board has shined the slogan "S O S"—Switch Off Something—and everybody is doing so as only there is no electricity, some shops and firms send the staff home at noon.

"What with the trains late and the shops shut, by the time you make the tea, it's time to go home," complained one barbings enthused—an elderly switchboard operator at one of the city's more venerable banking houses.

Actually the rail situation now has improved, and commuters no longer vie to see how many can cram into the loo—the toilet—on the trains. Four chaps from Chertsey claimed the title, then four guys and a girl, trailing loo-class out of Guildford, tried to squeeze themselves into the Guinness Book of World Records.

High Blood Pressure Threatens Thousands

MONTREAL (CP) — Imagine a garden hose with its water faucet open but nozzle closed. If the hose were long enough, its seams will rupture and it will sprink leaks.

About two million adult Canadians have arteries and blood vessels that are pressurized like the garden hose, and many will die prematurely because of ignorance and indifference about it, Dr. Donald S. Silverberg of Edmonton said at the annual Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons annual meeting.

The condition is called hypertension more commonly known as high-blood pressure—which most of the public thinks is not much more serious than the common cold, said Dr. Silverberg, an associate professor of medicine at the University of Alberta.

But the condition is so critical that a 35-year-old man with diastolic blood pressure (measured when heart muscle relaxes during its pump phase) over 100 can expect to live 24 more years, he said.

By comparison, a 35-year-old with a diastolic blood pressure of 80 could be expected to live to the age of 76.

Persons with high-blood pressure probably will die of hemorrhages, heart failure, heart attacks and kidney failure, he said. An estimated 25 per cent of deaths are associated with problems of high-blood pressure.

Cosmetics Chime Like Cash Register

By SHARON AIRHART

When D. H. McConnel, a door-to-door book salesman changed his line to perfume in 1886 and established the California Perfume Company, he probably never dreamed his perfume — and later cosmetic — containers would become the focal point of a cult.

The California Perfume Company became Avon in 1939. Avon, mother of the ding-dong ladies and today, source of unwanted bonanzas of glass, ceramic and plastic containers collected by a whole subculture of Avon fans in North America.

There are books published on Avon collectables, outlining prices (one early set runs about $350) at least two international organizations of the bobbyists, and monthly newsletters. Collectors — both male and female — pursue their avocation with all the intensity of the art patrons and have been known to fly off to distant cities at news of an available Lotus Cream container or an early Miss's Travelling Kit.

Belleville's Dorothy Rose - she's a "ding-dong lady" or Avon salesman - is one of those collectors and has, in the two years she's been collecting, acquired nearly 3,000 Avon products.

Mrs. Rose values her collection at more than $6,000.

A salesman for about six years, Mrs. Rose says she's now her own best customer. While trying to acquire pieces no longer produced by the U.S based firm, she keeps her collection up-to-date by purchasing almost all new products.

Housed in a room of its own with about 180 feet of shelving, Mrs. Rose's collection is a panorama of changing times.

A n early piece -- no mention of Avon, it bears only the mark of the California Perfume Company -- is a box of delicate toilet soap in a pink scrolled and flowered box. One of the newest additions, not yet marketed in Canada, is a plastic container of cream sachet. Portraying a long-haired jeaned girl with a similarly dressed boy in a sun-drenched meadow, it's called Sweet Honesty.

Mrs. Rose began her collection one spring by simply sorting through her own closets. She found she had saved more containers than she thought.

By Christmas, she needed a place to display them. Husband Verne, who runs Rose Construction, built a display room adjacent to the family recreation room for her collection. Ceiling to floor shelving holds the containers.

From Bright Night, Forever Spring, Quaintance to Moonveil and Sonnet, there are uncounted perfume containers. Each line of perfume, too, has its accompaniments: cream sachet, dusting powder, bath oil and beads, cologne and the like.

Her sources of supply for out-of-date containers are friends, customers and other collectors.

Mrs. Rose says whether a container is full or empty is not important. The thing is to have everything.

People have thrown out containers by the dozen: I did too, before I started. It's maddening."

"If you look around," she adds, "you'd think I had everything. But I don't."

There are glass unicorns holding perfume and plastic birdfeeders with bubble bath for kids. There are fluff puff bath powder dispensers, candleholders and teapots. Precious little mice and snails and lovebirds are really tiny perfume vials. Figs and bird of paradise and rainbow-hued butterflies hold cologne.

One wall of shelves holds "men's Avon: duck decoys, racks of guns, duner buggies and campers (the truck holds cologne, the camper holds talc) trains, Conestoga wagons golf clubs, pipes and anvils.

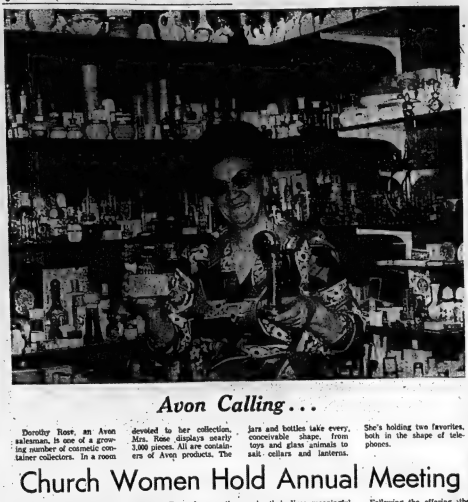
Lamps and lanterns and jam dishes, porcelain "French" telephone and nail cellars are part of the collection, too.

In fact, Mrs. Rose's room is so crowded now that Verne Rose may soon build an addition to house the collection. It, like the current gallery, will be broadcornered in case something is dropped.

One reason the collection is expanding so quickly, Mrs.



Rose explains, is that Avon is now producing many of its continually popular items in plastic and cardboard rather than glass and tin. For the collection to be complete, Mrs. Rose must collect the newer items, too.

While planning to list and catalogue the collection, Mrs. Rose says she loses hours looking at the imaginatively designed pieces.

"I go there for a few minutes and next thing I know two hours have passed.

"Besides I never run out of something to dust."

Dorothy Rose, an Avon salesman, is one of a growing number of cosmetic container collectors. In a room devoted to her collection, Mrs. Rose displays nearly 3,000 pieces. All are containers of Avon products. The jars and bottles take every, conceivable shape, from toys and glass animals to tall cellars and lanterns. She's holding two favorites, both in the shape of telephones.

Church Women Hold Annual Meeting

Personal Commitment was the theme of the 12th annual meeting of the Belleville Presbyterial United Church Women held at Holloway Street United Church yesterday.

Presbyterial president Helen Sexsmith began the morning with a call to worship to the congregation of 250 women gathered in the church.

Greetings were brought by Kathleen Poste, from the Holloway Street U.C.W. and Betty Thompson, president of the Bay of Quinte Conference, U.C.W.

After a worship service given by Jean Payton, Ruth Hoyche and Edge Smith talked about church literature.

A sing-song was led by Maude Harrison and Eileen Fox.

Guest speaker for the morning program was John Black Q.C. from Kingston, lay preacher in the United Church. Mr. Black talked about way in which people can make their lives meaningful, by committing themselves to Christian belief and action. He used as an example the life of Jean Vanier who has dedicated himself to helping the mentally retarded.

Mr. Black urged the U.C.W. members to make Christian commitment their top priority.

Rev. Clare Kellogg said grace for the guests at dinner served in the church hall at noon, by the Holloway St. U.C.W.

The afternoon session opened with hymn singing and a solo performed by Mary Kellogg.

Following the offering, the business meeting took place during which secretaries of U.C.W. groups read their yearly reports.

The Belleville Presbyterial Annual Report emphasized the variety of activities taking place among U.C.W. group during the past year, making special note of the India study pack used by the women.

The many ways in which U.C.W. groups raise money for their churches were reviewed, as were the volunteer services the ladies provide for their own munities.

After the new business was finished, the East Prince Edward group presented "Quin-Dec Capers."

followed by a hymn sing.

Miss Sexsmith talked about her year as president, before the new officers for 1974 were elected, and installed by Rev. Leslie Dean, Chairman of the Belleville Presbytery.

After the installatic ceremony, the afternoon ended with a benedictic given by Rev. Kellogg.

OUR CITY ON THE BAY: 1909

"Belleville historian W. C. Mikel predicted that Zwick's Island would become "one of the most attractive park sites in eastern Ontario," a prediction now being realized through the Centennial grants programme." — Gerald E. Boyce in Historic Hastings.

One of the greatly valued books in the Reference Room of the Corby Public Library today is a volume entitled CITY OF BELLEVILLE HISTORY compiled by W. C. Mikel, B.A., LL.B., K.C. It was complete in the 1940's but, in the special industrial souvenir number of The Daily Intelligencer, of 1909, is given this interesting account of the author:

"Among the members of the legal profession in Belleville none bears a higher reputation for thoroughness, ability and integrity than does Mr. William C. Mikel, K.C., City Clerk and City. Solicitor.

He is a native of Belleville, having been born on March 3rd, 1866, his father being Mr. W.Y. Mikel. He was educated in the Belleville public and high schools and Albert College.

After graduating from the latter he took the law course in Trinity University and was called to the bar in 1890. He has served the City several terms as alderman, and is now City Solicitor and City Clerk, a dual position which he fills with honor to himself and to general satisfaction of the citizens.

Mr. Mikel is a Past President of the Municipal Association and has been Secretary of the Ontario Bar Association since its organization. In law he has made a decided success. He studied in the offices of Bell and Bretzar, Flint and Sherry and George D. Dickson, becoming law partner of the last named.

His defence of James Kane on a charge of murder brought him into early prominence; but of later years his practice has been almost entirely on Municipal law. He has acted as Crown Prosecutor at many assizes throughout the Province and conducted the recent investigation of the D.D. Institute before the Royal Commission.

In 1908 he was appointed K.C., an honor richly deserved. In fraternal circles Mr. Mikel is very prominent. He is Second Principal, Moira Royal Arch Chapter, Past Master Moira lodge, A.F. A.M., Grand Trustee A.O.U.W., Grand Lodge Council Commander W.O.W., Chief Council C.O.O.F. Past Chief Ranger C.O.F., and a member of the I.O.F. and C.O.H.C.

Mr. Mikel married Miss Lillian Ewen in 1898, and they, with their one daughter Audrey, live in their comfortable home, No. 283 Charles Street."

On the frontice-page of Mr. Mikel's book is a reproduction of the Mayor's Office crest or coat of arms of Belleville. (Mr. Mikel was Mayor during 1924 and 1925) with a note which reads:

"The motto on the Crest in Latin is "Magnum est parsimonia vectigal" meaning: "Economy is the best revenue." The motto is said to have been taken from one of the addresses of the great ancient Roman statesman, Cicero."

Head Table Guests

Poster Place Cards for Parties

But Princess Ghislaine de Polignac wanted to leave something better than that to posterity.

A quarter-century at the galas and formal dinners is documented in an exhibition, The Seating Arrangements of Ghislaine, which may travel to North America in the future.

Whenever the princess plans to feed a number of people, either in her apartment on the Ile St. Louis or at a second best, at Maxim's, she hangs a huge hand-painted chart of the seating arrangements in the vestibule.

Some are festooned with scrolls, flowers and foliage. Others are collages of exotic birds and butterflies and one has the names written in the windows of an 18th-century chateau.

"I always write the names in a special antique script which is very large," Mme. de Polignac said. "I do not want to oblige my guests to fumble for their glasses. It is an amusing surprise for people to read the names of their guests when they arrive." Occasionally, if guests are not amused by some names on the list, they can quietly beat a retreat before being announced.

"When I was little, I was always drawing things," the princess said. "I was expelled from school because I drew instead of doing my math. What I thigk or talk on the telphone, I draw. I have always lived with a pencil in my hand."

Her charts read like a aristocracy. Counts, barons and dukes are on the majority, livened up by a sprinkling of Royal Highnesses. The princess is not above doing watercolors of parties to which she is merely invited.

"I rush home and make them from memory," she observed, waving at portraits of friends who attended Baron Guy de Rothschild's Proust party in 1971.

"Anyone in his right mind would rather eat an egg with someone amusing than caviar with a bunch of bores," she said. Especially if you have to invite them back."

Woman Thinks Quick As Wink

OTTAWA (CP) — Shakuntala Devi, 31, says she can't cook, or knit and at times can't remember where she is supposed to be.

But it takes her only six seconds to work out in her head the cube root of a 30-digit number.

At a demonstration recently Miss Devi multiplied one 20-digit number with another and came up with the answer in the blink of an eye.

In three seconds she gave the cube root of 61,962,782 (the 428) and the fourth root of 83,. 321 (is 171).

Asked the what you'd get by dividing 2) by seven, she replied: 3.142857 CIRCU etc., etc.

"It's just a gift," she says.

Miss Devi does not know how she does it, but she has been doing it since she was three.

She says she does not do computations in her head, but merely concentrates on the problem.

Successful Living

'Perfect Prey' Was Taken

Dear Doris: Recently a basement wall caved in and had to be rebuilt. Estimates came in from builders and eventually I picked a lemon! Workmen came for an hour once or twice a week, and did jobs which were not necessary. By the time I got rid of him he had stripped a brick wall and part of two entrances, which had to be rebuilt later at a cost of $2,000.

I received his bill of $1,000 and when I asked for details he refused. His lawyer presented me with a bill over $3,000 which I refused to pay.

I reported to every government agency and consumer bureau I found and it was the embarrassment in my city who helped. Damage or no damage I did pay what I had promised to the original working hours, material, and 10 per cent, which came to $1,000.

So I suppose I was lucky after all. I paid $1.00 for an estimated $250 job, but I was saved from the siding job of $1,500 for which they might after all I paid $1,000 for an have charged me $6,000 in the end. The catch in the short contract was "No extra work included". Who was I to know which was "extra work" and which was not?

Perfect Prey.

Dear Prey: Unscrupulous contractors can produce unreasonable sums from the unwary. But you were far from the perfect prey, since you kept your head and made use of the legal and social services which are there to save all of us unsuspecting consumers from the pitfalls.

Confidential to Worried Niece: Perhaps if your uncle's family were to realize how unsafe and unhappy he is in the old folks' home they would be more thought to your office to continue as his housekeeper. Was it coming more when he maintained a home?

Another question: Have you thought of approaching the supervisor of the home? Perhaps between you, you could work out the best times to visit him, explaining that often when you have come he has been asleep or you have been sent away without seeing him; or dismissed after you have seen him for only a short time.

I admire your concern. If you get nowhere with the family nor with the institution* make an appointment with the family counsellor service where you are. Ask a trained social worker for guidance about how best to make your beloved uncle happier.

(Talk it over with Doris by writing to her in care of this newspaper. This Canadian social worker can lend new light on your problem.)

Ann Landers

No Name Too Hard to Pronounce

Dear Ann Landers: I read the account of the woman who was called "Mrs. Watchamacallit" by a fellow committee member, and it reminded me of an experience I had in high school.

My last name is of Dutch origin. Our family has lived in this community for many years and our name, though not easy to pronounce, is well known and highly respected.

When I was a freshman in high school, a certain teacher called roll every morning. For weeks, when he came to my name, he would stop, make a peculiar face, and say, "How Do you pronounce this?" It was always good for a laugh. Of course I was embarrassed. I asked my parents one day why they didn't change our name, as some of our relatives had done. My mother replied, "This is your father's name, and it's an honorable one. Just be proud of it."

The next day when the same teacher pulled that old stunt, I shouted, "If you will stay after school a few minutes," sir, I'll teach you how to pronounce it." The kids then laughed at HIM, and the next day he pronounced my name without any hesitation.—Miles City, vermont

Dear VL: Thanks for the short course. As I said before no name is unpronounceable if a person will take the time and trouble.

Dear Ann Landers: I am writing to you because I don't know where else to express myself. I am fed up with the TV ads that try to scare the living daylights out of people who smoke. If I want to smoke, whose business is it? I am of legal age. I enjoy smoking, and it's a rotten shame that certain authorities feel they have the right to push their prejudices and "scientific findings" on others.

Smoking is about the only thing left that isn't immoral, illegal or fattening. Please, tell those TV people to crap it. One Who'd Rather Fight Than Quit.

Dear One: Apparently you are hooked, but that's your problem. The anti-smoking ads are to help those who have become hooked, and at the risk of boring you I'll say it again. There is no way to save people who are self-destructive. But it does make sense to prevent the medical facts to those who have a choice. Smoking harms the breath, is bad for people with heart trouble and respiratory problems and there is irrefutable clinical evidence that a link exists between cigaret smoking and lung cancer.

Dear Ann Landers: My husband has a beautiful voice and I can't carry a tune in a bucket. He enjoys singing in church groups, benefit productions and community affairs. Several "nightingales" are after him constantly to do duets and harmony bits. The late evening rehearsals are getting to me. I trust him, but I don't trust them.

I used to go along for company but now I work overtime several evenings a week. He expects part of my night work because we can sure use the extra money. But I'm beginning to suspect he enjoys the "freedom." Any suggestions?—Fellles Weigh

Dear Follies: If you are really concerned, you'd better weigh the overtime against the risk of your husband winding up in A Flat with one of those canaries.

'Judge Kids' Books Like any Literature'

EDMONTON (CP) — Children's literature should be judged on the same basis as other literature, in the opinion of Jeanne Murphy, who is working on a PhD on the subject.

Perhaps the best judge is the child, she said.

"You can't fool a child. He reacts to what he feels and he won't be put off by anything shoddy."

Mrs. Henry, who has children aged six, four and almost two, is concerned with the high cost of children's books and appalled at the quality of some of them.

"If a person is going to spend $5 or more for a book, dard. The Canadian ads all concerned consumers to write to their Provincial Ministers of Transport asking for immediate action and co-operation in co-ordinating Canadian standards in the manufacture of school buses and in school bus operations. CAC National Headquarters is located at 100 Gloucester Street, Ottawa.

it is a terrible investment," she said.

"If the child isn't getting anything out of it, then it's not a good book."

Mrs. Henry is critical of the contrived vocabulary, exacto-read books which parents are encouraged to buy for beginning readers because the limit on the number of words restricts the author's creativity.

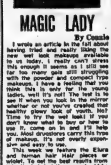
"If the child is given nothing but books at this level, he is not encouraged to learn to cope with unfamiliar words or ideas."

The author of children's books must be able to feel as a child and must know his own childhood, she said.

Even more important, the person selecting the book must be familiar with it and with the child for whom it is intended.

Fairy tales are very moral stories, Mrs. Henry said.

"The prince doesn't get the princess just because he is a prince. He has had to struggle, to overcome obstacles."



Mrs. Henry recognizes that children may occasionally read books that rate lower in literary value.

The Nancy Drew and Hardy and Hardy Boy stories, for example, appear to satisfy a need within the child, she said, but the child also needs to be exposed to alternatives so he doesn't get stuck on that level.

MAGIC LADY

By Cassie

I wrote an article in the fall about having tried and really liking the Magic wet look makeup. I wrote to us today. I really can't stress how much I like this stuff. It is perfect for two major parts still plaguing me with the powder and compact type makeups. I have a feeling that I'm more fair in only for the young skin, but I'm 30 and I like it as well as when you said. So the matter of whether or not you've created that healthy glow look of youth, like Time to try the wet look! If you haven't tried it, I'll be glad to show you it. It comes on in seconds and stays on. Most drugstores carry this type of makeup. It's not overly sticky or slimy and easy to use.

Also I've been using the Elura and Norman hair hair pieces or wiglet. To me the best results from this. Has kind of a thick wiglet that is long enough to twist on. The longer hair is then combed over the top of it. Of course we'll show you how to use so that you can handle it yourselves, after all you can't be coming in to your hairdresser every day, so you'll have to in and out. "MAGIC LADY"

P.S. Even your "new look" letters receive a verbal reply. Cassie writes to one of the above, answers to your "magic Lady" thoughts.

St. Francis Xavier's Body Deteriorates

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — The body of Saint Francis Xavier, intrepid Jesuit missionary who died during his travels through Asia more than four centuries ago, will be exposed to public veneration next year for what may be the last time.

Church authorities in Goa, the former Portuguese enclave on India's west coast where the exposition will be held, have announced that it would "probably be the last time because the body is showing signs of deterioration."

The body of the 16th century saint, remarkably preserved though shrunken and darkened with age, will lie in state in a crystal coffin in the chapel of the Basilica of Bom Jesus in the ancient town of Old Goa.

At least 300,000 Christian pilgrims from India and abroad are expected to pay at the feet of the saint during the showing from Nov. 23, 1974, to Jan. 5, 1975. It will only be the 12th recorded exposition of the body.

It will be the second such event since Indian troops marched into Goa in 1961 and integrated it with India after 400 years of Portuguese colonial rule. The last time was in 1964 immediately after the International Eucharistic Congress held in Bombay.

The body of St. Francis Xavier has been lying in the church since it was brought to Goa for unexplained reasons in 1554, two years after his death at the age of 46.

He is believed to have arrived in India in May, 1542, sent by Pope Paul III and King John III of Portugal to work for the welfare of the people of the East. The priest then wandered through India, Ceylon, Japan, Malacca and other places and died while waiting to enter China on the island of Shang Chuan near Canton.

He was canonized in 1622. Pope Benedict XIV, in a brief issued in 1748, appointed him chief patron and protector of the Indies from the Cape of Good Hope to China and Japan and the lands adjacent to them "in which he had labored and wanted to labor."

Several miracles such as the curing of diseases were soon associated with the body of the saint and people have since flocked in the thousands to pray at its feet during expositions.

The right arm, missing from the body, is believed to be in the custody of Jesuits in the Church of Del Gesu, Rome. According to legend, it was severed in 1614 and taken to the Vatican to provide proof of his saintliness.

The arm is then said to have taken a quilt and signed the saint's name before the eyes of the pontiff.

A toe from the right foot is also missing. It is said to have been bitten off by a Portuguese noble woman, Dona Isabel de Garona, in 1554 as a keepsake.

However, a legend says, the body started bleeding profusely from the wound left by the bite, although it had been lifeless for more than two years. The bleeding stopped only when the woman returned the toe, which is also exposed to the public at times.

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1974

Grade 1 Tour

The police station is a fascinating place if you are a Grade 1 student who is just learning about the type of jobs people do in Belleville. Yesterday, more than 50 Grade 1 students from Queen Victoria Public School toured the Belleville police station with their teachers, and traffic safety Sergeant Bob Hall. The tour was a part of a course on Community Helpers. The usual, the cell block and the garage, which houses police cars and motorcycles, were highlights of the tour.

Water, Sewer Proposal

City Refuses Offer Of Provincial Takeover

Latest proposals of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment for extension of water and sanitary sewer services into Thurlow and Sidney townships are not considerable to the city of Belleville.

This was the decision of council following an all-day meeting at city hall Thursday after details of the two proposals were explained by local professional staff.

The ministry proposal for extension of water services would have seen the province take over the city's water filtration plant in the west end of the city with extension of mains outside the city limits to service Sidney, Thurlow and possibly Ameliasburgh townships.

The sanitary sewer plan would see the Moira River trunk sewer extended north across Highway 401 to serve parts of Thurlow and eventual construction of another trunk west into Sidney township.

In turning down the two ministry proposals, however, council made it clear this action did not mean the city was not prepared to discuss provision of services to the adjoining townships.

Rather, the city indicated it would prefer to maintain ownership of its water filtration plant and 250 family tickets have been printed for each show.

On the basis of these figures, if all tickets are sold in advance, gross receipts will total $9,525. After the $6,000 split, the Jaycees will get $4,707. From this they must deduct approximately $4,000 for circus fees, advertising, telephones, rental and licence. However, if ticket sales are light, the Jaycees, under their contract, will not lose money.

The Jaycees will not apply to the Ontario Athletic Revenue Board. No charity is obliged to get the board's approval, but most do for scheduling and spacing of activities.

"However," said Mr. Wardell, "because we're selling a product, not asking for donations, we don't have to apply.

Saying that adverse publicity "will hurt us," Mr. Wardell described the Jaycee association with Ian M. Garden as "good."

The company has been booked, fair and above board with us," he said.

Mr. Purdon said his firm runs circuses across the province every year including several for police associations.

Bus Fares Stay Same

Members of the Belleville Transit Commission at their inaugural meeting of the year held Thursday agreed that there were no prospects for 1974 increase in bus fares.

Mrs. Marylea Burtt, was re-elected commission chairman for the next year, her sixth year as commission head. Other commission members are Ron Moorman and Victor Allen.

Mrs. Burtt reported today that the commission is giving consideration to purchase of up to six portable bus shelters to be spotted in still unselected locations in the city. The shelters are expected to cost about $1,200 each. Also under consideration the commission will purchase two new 45-passenger diesel buses.

Biggest item on the 1974 commission program is the construction of its new garage and office headquarters on Coleman Street.

Seniors Get Sidney Grant

Stirling and Community Senior Citizens Club can expect to receive a grant of $50 to defray the maintenance costs of facilities it currently uses in the town's Masonic Hall.

Earlier this week, Sidney township council decided to grant the club $50, a sum equivalent to a grant Rawdon township council donated. The club serves 95 people in the area.

The club will receive the funds in February. This year was the first Sidney council donated money to the club.

extension into Thurlow.

The main reason for council turning down the ministry's water and sewer extension proposals was the cost factor that would result for city ratepayers.

In the case of the city's water filtration plant, the ministry was not prepared to pay the city any money for taking over the service.

Rather, the proposal was for the ministry to take over the facility and in the words of one councillor "pay us with our own money."

The proposal suggested a township rate of 40.3 cents per 1,000 gallons, with the city rate of 34.6 cents, or a differential of 15.7 cents.

The depreciated value of the city-owned assets that the ministry would take over is set at $4,115,000. In establishing the proposed water rates, utilities manager Neil Britton said the ministry had given no recognition to inflationary trends.

While rates to be charged the townships and the city will fluctuate as operating costs, water consumption and costs of plant additions vary, the initial rate differential would continue for 40 years and then cease.

On the basis of the estimated flows and interest costs, the differential of 15.7 cents per 1,000 gallons would repay the $4,115,000 purchase price of the filtration plant over a 40-year period. After that 40-year period there would be no rate differential.

Following purchase of the water plant by the province, the city would still be expected to pay off existing plant debentures.

The province would not take over any of the city's distribution mains, the maintenance of which would continue to be a city responsibility.

Mr. Britton said that for the initial 20 years, it could be an advantage to the city to enter into the provincial scheme. But after 20 years year period the rate differential would be extinguished and benefits now enjoyed from ownership of the plant would no longer accrue to city consumers.

While recommending that the water system remain the property of the city, Mr. Britton, said however, the fact remained that water must eventually be extended outside the present city limits.

But regardless of ownership of water facilities, Mr. Britton said the most economical and efficient public water system would be achieved only through careful planning.

"The area is going to grow and the water system must grow to meet the growth," he said.

Utilities commission chairman Gerald O'Connor noted that although the action was not likely, the ministry has the authority to enforce provision of water services to the townships.

Thurlow councillor Walter Hamilton told council that some wells in the built-up areas of Canniffon and Foxboro were already polluted.

And utilities commissioner Lyle Langabeer noted that with the proposed takeover of would still be the responsibility of the commission to do the billing and collect rates.

"We would do all the work and they (the province) would reap the benefit," he said.

City council members were unanimous in rejection of the ministry's proposal for extension of area water service, with Alderman Arthur Regan being the most emphatic.

He said the day's meeting was possibly the most important in local history, stating that local municipalities were at the crossroads.

He couldn't understand why Sidney and Thurlow townships allowed development without proper services.

He said he didn't like the word urbanization, but claimed that any area outside the city limits serviced by the city should become part of the city.

Mayor Robin Jeffrey noted that Thurlow had already agreed in township resolution of a parcel of property east of the city to allow location of the proposed Lennox and Gamble industrial plant.

Also, she said the township was prepared for annexation of a further 400 acres in the same area between the city limits and Highway 401 to even out the city's boundary.

A condition of this further annexation would be for the city to allow extension of water service to Camilton and other built-up areas north of the four-lane highway.

She admitted it was a "trade-off" but one which could be of benefit to both municipalities.

City council will meet next Thursday at city hall with their Thurlow counterparts to discuss provision of water service to the township.

The ministry's proposal for extension of s sewer service into the township met with the same reception as did the water service proposal.

The sewer plan resolution stated that following careful examination the proposal in its present form was found not acceptable at this time.

In the case of sewer extension into the rural area, however, the city allowed it has part of an agreement with the province regarding the sewage treatment plant and the trunk sanitary sewer up the Moira River.

The city said its sewage treatment plant, built by province some years ago has one of the highest capacities for an area sewer system.

Since then the province has increased the plant capacity, added a secondary treatment plant, and also constructed the ministry's proposal would be a 21-inch trunk sanitary sewer from the west city limits to the Front Street pumping station, an Avonlough pumping station and an 18-inch force main from the Avonlough pumping station to the 27-inch trunk sanitary sewer.

Also included would be eventual expansion of the Front Street pumping station and a 14-inch force main from the pumping station to the sewage plant and eventual expansion of the sewage plant to 12-million-gallon capacity.

City engineer Wilbur Purcell told council that there would be no need for proposed agreement to assure the sep vices would be used to the extent indicated.

This was because growth areas outside the city were not indicated. If the services were not to a high degree estimated, the service rate to be charged would go up.

City Manager Albert Elliott said that the implementation of the proposal would result in only extremely limited benefits for the city and would be expensive for Belleville residents.

As would have been the case with the water proposal, the city would still have the maintenance responsibility of the sanitary collector sewer mains in the city.

Jaycees Concerned Over Circus

By LENNY WILLIAMSON
Staff Reporter

Belleville Jaycees are concerned about the circus they are sponsoring in the Memorial Arena May 22.

"It's impossible to sell tickets since that operation," said a spokesman, referring to The Intelligencer feature firm handling advance sales of circus tickets.

But the show will go on.

"We're committed to running the circus," said Jaycee past president Glenn Wardell. "We're giving people a chance to watch something Belleville couldn't offer any other way. We still feel we are doing the correct thing."

The Junior Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring Garden Brothers circus and the promotion firm, Ian M. Garden (Ontario) Inc. is handling advance sales from telephones in the Jaycees' office.

"We are pleased they (the promotion firm) asked the Jaycees for sponsorship because the theme of our program is community betterment," said Mr. Wardell. "The circus is not intended for the underprivileged — it's a community project.

People buy tickets because the Jaycees are sponsors. We're going on our past service record."

The Jaycees community betterment projects include sponsorship of a beauty pageant and a minor hockey team, annual repair of bus stop benches, leadership training, Winter Carnival, Santa Claus parade participation Quebec-Ontario student exchange in the summer.

Suggestion Is Approved

City council this week approved a Belleville Harbor Improvement Committee recommendation calling for a feasibility study to determine whether the Bay of Quinte should be included in the Jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

Alderman Siu Meeks said he would undertake to gather the necessary information while Mayor Robin Jeffrey will write to the municipalities involved.

The idea would be to have the St. Lawrence Parks Commission jurisdiction extended westerly from its present boundary to Presqu'ile.,

Alderman Meeks said that for years vacationers' boats passing through the Welland Canal have headed down the bay to the St. Lawrence area.

He said there is a big economic boost to this area if the St. Lawrence Parks area could be extended west to Presqu'ile.

Plan Will Go Public

Within the next three weeks, Belleville citizens will have a new, and long-awaited topic of discussion.

The draft official plan, a document that charts the nature and form of future development within the city limits, will be unveiled to the public at a series of four meetings held in various parts of Belleville.

Delayed for more than a year, the draft plan will receive its first comments from the public after months of revision by the Quinte Planning Board and Jean Wells Monteith, planning consultant with Totten, Sims, Hubicki Associates, a Toronto firm.

The four meetings will be held in each one of the planning districts outlined in the draft plan. Dates and places are: Tuesday, Feb. 5 — Moira Secondary School cafeteria. Wednesday, Feb. 6 — Belleville Collegiate Institute boy's gym. Tuesday, Feb. 12 — Quinte Secondary School cafeteria, and Wednesday, Feb. 13 — Ben Bleecker Auditorium.

Members of the planning board and the consultant will be present during the meetings to present the plan and field any questions.

However, prior to the meetings, a summary of the plan, as well as six maps, will be published in The Intelligencer, Monday, Jan. 28.

The maps will detail the planning districts, density and land use, park and road allocations, and the municipal services structure proposed for the city.

Provincial Loans More than Double

The Ontario Development Corporation, which serves Hastings County among other counties, more than doubled its lending activity to businesses in Eastern Ontario during the last three months of 1973 compared to the same period in 1972.

Industry and Tourism minister Claude Bennett announced that 30 ODC loans totalling $3.9 million went to eastern Ontario in the last quarter of 1973 as against 12 loans for a total of $1.5 million in the same quarter of the previous year.

Mr. Bennett said that increased lending by the province of Ontario will result in an important rise in new capital investment and job opportunities.

Planned projects by businesses receiving loans in 1973 are expected to require $9 million in additional capital investment and create 1,500 new jobs within five years. This is in comparision with $2.8 million in new capital investment and 275 jobs as a result of loans authorized in the 1972 quarter.

Eastern Ontario's tourism industry benefitted from an expanded loan program announced in June 1973. In the final quarter of the year, loans totalling $461,200 were authorised for five tourist operations.

Loans under the Ontario Business Incentives program, (introduced last August, accounted for over $1 million in the last three months of 1973.

Eastern Ontario Development Corporation will serve the counties of Hastings, Victoria, Haliburton, Peterborough, Prince, Edward, Renfrew, Lenoxa and Addington, Frontenac, Lanark, Leeds, Grenville, Russell, Dundas, Stormont, Prescott and Glengarry and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton.

The number of tickets printed for the circus equals the number of seats in the arena, about 1,500 for each of the two performances. Mr. Purdon said about 750 children's tickets and 250 family tickets have been printed for each show.

On the basis of these figures, if all tickets are sold in advance, gross receipts will total $9,525. After the 50-50 split, the Jaycees will get $4,707. From this they must deduct approximately $4,000 for circus fees, advertising, telephones, rental and licence. However, if ticket sales are light, the Jaycees, under their contract, will not lose money.

The Jaycees will not apply to the Ontario Athletic Revenue Board. No charity is obliged to get the board's approval, but most do for scheduling and spacing of activities.

"However," said Mr. Wardell, "because we're selling a product, not asking for donations, we don't have to apply.

Mr. Purdon said his firm runs circuses across the province every year including several for police associations.

Paul Henderson

Winger Sidelined

TORONTO (CP) — Left winger Paul Henderson will be missing from Toronto Maple Leafs' lineup for at least three next two games, the National Hockey League club said Thursday.

Henderson, who became ill during Wednesday's game against Cleveland Crusaders, left the game with the Leafs leading 3-2 and was replaced by Greg Goodall.

Henderson, who has been bothered by a stomach disorder, was examined by club physician Dr. Gerry Hinse.

Cheevers Chills Toronto Toros

By NEIL CAMPBELL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Cleveland goaltender Gerry Cheevers held Toronto Toros at bay for 20 minutes Thursday night.

That was more than long enough for the Crusaders, who were well on their way to a 5-3 World Hockey Association victory.

In Thursday's only other game, Houston Aeros strengthened their hold on first place in the WHA West Division with a 2-1 win over Quebec Nordiques.

The veteran Cheevers had to be at his best, in the first period, when Toronto had an 18-12 edge in shots on goal but fell behind 3-0.

Over-all, Cheevers blocked 40 shots while Gilles Gratton, the young Toronto goalie, made only 29 saves.

"Cheevers was the story," said Toronto coach Billy Harris. "He played a terrific game."

"Any time you get behind two or three goals, you're in trouble," said Harris. "But I've been out-team play worse and win. We missed too many chances . . . the rolls were against us."

It took only a little more than three minutes for the Crusaders to get the game firmly in hand. Brad Erickson, Gerry Pinder and Paul Shmyr scored in that span midway in the first period.

A crowd of 8,016 turned out to see the Toros, who operated in Ottawa as the Nationals last season.

The game is one of several shifted to Ottawa by the Toros, who couldn't get enough dates for all of their home games at Toronto's Varsity Arena.

The win moved Cleveland to within one point of the second-place Toros in the WHA East Division. Toronto has played four more games than the Crusaders.

Aeros 5 Nordiques 1

Gordie Howe scored one goal himself and set up three other goals for the Aeros—two by his son Mark and one by Andre Hinse.

The victory was seventh in eight games during a three-week home stand for the Aeros. They increased their lead over second-place Edmonton Oilers and Winnipeg Jets to six points.

The Oilers and Jets play tonight at Winnipeg. Tonight's other games have the Nordiques at Los Angeles Sharks and Chicago Cougars at Minnesota Fighting Saints.

The Saints, who have been having trouble paying their arena rent in St. Paul, got a reprieve Thursday. They were given until June 15 to pay their rent. Rent was due 24 hours after each game.

Vancouver Blazers, who acquired Rob Walton from the Saints in a Wednesday trade, Thursday sent down goalie George Gardner and forwards Dennis Meloche and Michel Plante and called up goalie Yves Archambault in a player switch with Roanoke Valley Rebels of the Southern Hockey League.

Raiders Regain Lead

OTTAWA (CP) — In a second Central Junior Hockey League battle Thursday, Nepean Raiders regained the league lead by beating Gloucester Rangers 8-7.

But the battle is only half over as the two teams go back at it again tonight in Nepean with the Rangers second by only two points.

Other action tonight has Pembroke Lumber Kings at Brockville Warriors and Rockland Nationals at Smiths Falls against the Bears.

Nepean and Gloucester dropped through 2-2 and 4-4 early periods with goalies Rocky Menard of Gloucester and Bill Courchaine doing yeoman service. Menard handled 49 Nepean shots, 19 in each the first and third periods, while Courchaine absorbed 41 shots by Gloucester.

Those that got away from them included two each for Nepean by Sid Tanchak and Mike Eaves and one each by Simon Underhill, Paul Millman, Larry Sniper, Maurice Leger and Art Powell.

Canadiens Gaining on Bruins

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hockey fans at Boston Garden don't take a supposed injustice to their beloved Bruins lightly.

When Bobby Orr took a tumble Thursday night and referee Wally Harris failed to call a tripping penalty, they threw a tantrum that delayed the finish of a National Hockey League game by 40 minutes.

When the final 50 seconds could be played, Chicago Black Hawks preserved a 2-1 win over the Bruins.

Orr was the first to blow his top. When he was handed a misconduct and the Bruins a bench penalty, the 18,003 paying customers blew their tops, showering the ice with debris.

The garbage shower turned into a downpour and James C. Moore, assistant business agent of the Building Services Union, pulled a cleanup crew off the ice until a threat of arrests rested order.

"It was too hazardous for them out there when the fans were throwing things," Moore explained. "A couple of them nearly got hit with debris."

A Bruin spokesman said the league took no immediate disciplinary action, but that NHL president Clarence Campbell would issue a statement today.

Reporters were barred from the Bruin dressing room for 10 minutes after the game while coach Bep Guidolin met with Harry Sinden, managing director, and Weston Adams Jr., president of the club.

"Harris said he called an offside on the play," said Orr. "He said you can't call a penalty after a whistle. That's wrong."

Other Bruins were unhappy with Harris too.

"He wasn't only calling bad ones on us," said NHL scoring leader Phil Esposito. "He called a bad game. I may get fined for saying it, but what's he getting to do?"

Derek Sanderson was handed a misconduct and game misconduct earlier in the game after he skated up to Harris and appplauded a Chicago penalty in the referee's face.

Black Hawk goalie Tony Esposito stopped 32 shots, making first-period goals by Pit Martin and Dagy Hoka stand up for the win. Greg Sheppard scored for Boston.

A 4-1 win by Montreal Canadiens over Buffalo Sabres may not have made the Bruins any happier. It cut their East Division lead over the Canadiens to four points. Philadelphia Flyers tied Los Angeles Kings 4-4 in Thursday's other game.
